CARSON-OWEN

One of the prettiest of the many weddings planned for this month, which is supposed to be dedicated especially to brides, took place last Wednesday night when Miss Lulu Owen of Ann Arbor, fourth daughter of J. W. Owen and wife of Tecumseh, and Victor Carson of Jackson were united in marriage at the home of Miss Owen's sister, Mrs. Elmer Stoffiet of 507 Detroit street.

Although Miss Owen chose to have the affair as simple as possible, over 95 guest witnessed the ceremony which was performed by Dr. Carl S. Patton of the First Congregational church at 7.30 o'clock.

Master Ross Stoffiet, son of Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Stoffiet, opened the door for the guests, and Miss Owen and Mr. Carson received them at the entrance to the parlor. When all had arrived the young couple took their places under a canopy of white and green, in the center of which hung a wedding bell with a rosebud clapper and the full Episcopal service was read. The bride wore an imported hand-embroidered gown of white, and carried bride,s roses. There were no attendants. A short reception followed the ceremony and then the guests were shown into the dinning room where refreshments were served. This room was done in pink and white, an abundance of roses being used, and the refreshments consisted of ice cream in the form of American beauty roses The back parlor where the beautiful wedding gifts were displayed was decorated in yellow and green.

The groom's gift to the bride was a beautiful diamond and pearl pendant which was the only ornament she wore.

Mr and Mrs. Carson left shortly after the ceremony for a brief trip east, after which they will go to the home which is ready for them at Jackson where Mr. Carson is employed as a window trimmer for L. H. Field & Co. Mrs. Carson has lived in Ann Arbor for several years and has been very well known and liked.

The guests from out of town were: Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Owen, Misses Jennie and Ada Owen of Tecumseh: the groom's parents Mr. and Mrs. William Carson, his sister Misses Mae and Grace, and Henry, all of Parma; Mr. and Mrs. Covert of Albion; Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Landon of Parma; Miss Bertha Heinghly, Mrs. Paradise of Jackson; Miss Chetam of Paris, Tex. ALL RIGHT

On the 27th day of Nov. one Anton Signor complained to Justice Hosmer that John Siler of the township of Macon was indebted to him (Segnor) in the sum of $18 for work and labor performed that Mr Siler thinking to defraud him out of said pay induced him on some pretext or other, to go with him and when they were some 15 miles from home Signor was ordered to get out of the buggy and leave never to show his face again under threat of great bodily harm. Signor wanted his pay and instituted suit to collect the same. This enraged the said Siler and taking the law into his own hands proceeded to chastise the young man. This was objected to as not the right kind of pay so he called on Justice Hosmer and made complaint for assault and battery. A warrant was issued and the Deputy Sheriff marched the said Siler into court. Siler thought to tell the court some points in the case that were objected to very strongly by his honor. The gentlemen was told very plainly that he must give bail for $200 or go to jail to await trial on June 15. No bail could be had so Mr. Siler went to board with Sheriff Knowles. On June 10 he changed his plea of not guilty to guilty. The justice advised him to pay the boy the $18 which was done. A fine of $25 and $15 costs were paid and Mr. Siler went home a sadder but a wiser man.

A Clear Skin and Bright Eyes are Easy to Get.

All the beauty creams in creation won't improve your complexion if your stomach is out of order.

Read what a Kansas woman says: "I want to praise Mi-o-na stomach tablets, for I had been doctoring for over a year for stomach trouble and found nothing that did me as much good as Mi-o-na does. You can use my name for Mi-o-na has done a world of good for me when doctors failed." — Mrs. Cordelia B. Mann, 207 E. 11th St., Junction City Kans. Nov. 1, 1909.

The shooting was done by Joe Perry, who has made his escape, but the sheriff and his men are on the trail of the would be murderer.

Douglass, Ga., June 13.—After a search of six years by relatives, George W. Lipscomb has been found here and informed that a fortune of $500,000 is awaiting him at Jackson, Mich., as a legacy from an aunt.

Free Child's Remedy

What mother is not looking for something that will help her children in the little ills of life, something for the stomach trouble and the bowel trouble? Long ago she probably has become convinced that a child cannot readily swallow a pill or a tablet, and that to "break them in half and crush them" is an annoyance; that usually they work too drastically, and are nauseating and too powerful for the little one's stomach.

Any mother who will take the trouble of sending her name and address can obtain a free sample bottle of a remedy that thousands of other mothers are using and now paying for. This remedy is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, and the offer of a free trial bottle is open to any mother who has not yet used it. Having used it and convinced yourself that it is what you want, you can obtain it in the future of your druggist at fifty cents and one dollar a bottle, just as so many others are doing, the free sample being simply to convince you of its merits. It is the best way to begin on it. Mrs. L. Davis of 157 W. Harrison street, Chicago, and Mrs. Mary Belford, 1710 Coke street, Louisville, Ky., both started with a free sample and now they write that they have never been without a bottle in the house since.

It is undoubtedly a great family remedy, as it is adapted to all ages, being mild and pleasant to take and yet thoroughly effective. It is especially the ideal remedy for children and women and old folks, who need something pure, mild and natural. It has the advantage of being a thorough laxative and yet contains tonic properties. Use it for the most stubborn constipation, indigestion, liver trouble, sick headache, sour stomach and such complaints with a guarantee that it will cure.

Dr. Caldwell personally will be pleased to give you any medical advice you may desire for yourself or family pertaining to the stomach, liver or bowels absolutely free of charge. Explain your case in a letter and he will reply to you in detail. For the free sample simply send your name and address on a postal card or otherwise. For either request the doctor's address is Dr. W. B. Caldwell, R.500 Caldwell building, Monticello, Ill.

PINCHOT FLAYS BOTH PARTIES.

Delivers Address Before Roosevelt Club in St. Paul.

"CONGRESS FAVORS TRUSTS."

"It Is a Greater Thing to Be a Good Citizen Than to Be a Good Republican or a Good Democrat," Former Forest Chief Declares.

St. Paul, June 11.—Gifford Pinchot delivered the following address before the Roosevelt club here:

Conservation has captured the nation. Its progress during the last twelve months is amazing. Official opposition to the conservation movement, whatever damage it has done or still threatens to the public interest, has vastly strengthened the grasp of conservation upon the minds and consciences of our people. Efforts to obscure or belittle the issue have served only to make it larger and clearer in the public estimation. The conservation movement cannot be checked by the baseless charge that it will prevent development or that every man who tells the plain truth is either a muckraker or a demagogue. It has taken firm hold on our national moral sense, and when an issue does that it has won.

The conservation issue is a moral issue, and the heart of it is this: For whose benefit shall our natural resources be conserved—for the benefit of us all or for the use and profit of the few? This truth is so obvious and the question itself so simple that the attitude toward conservation of any man in public or private life indicates his stand in the fight for public rights.

All monopoly rests on the unregulated control of natural resources and natural advantages, and such control by the special interests is impossible without the help of politics. The alliance between business and politics is the most dangerous thing in our political life. It is the snake that we must kill. The special interests must get out of politics or the American people will put them out of business. There is no third course.

Because the special interests are in politics we as a nation have lost confidence in congress. This is a serious statement to make, but it is true. It does not apply, of course, to the men who really represent their constituents and who are making so fine a fight for the conservation of self government. As soon as these men have won their battle and consolidated their victory confidence in congress will return.

Work For the Few.

But in the meantime the people of the United States believe that as a whole the senate and the house no longer represent the voters by whom they were elected, but the special interests by whom they are controlled. They believe so because they have so often seen congress reject what the people desire and do instead what the interests demand. And of this there could be no better illustration than the tariff.

The tariff under the policy of protection was originally a means to raise the rate of wages. It has been made a tool to increase the cost of living. The wool schedule, professing to protect the wool grower, is found to result in sacrificing grower and consumer alike to one of the most rapacious of trusts.

The cotton cloth schedule was increased in the face of the uncontradicted public testimony of the manufacturers themselves that it ought to remain unchanged.

The steel trust demanded and by a trick secured an indefensible increase in the tariff on structural steel.

The sugar trust stole from the government like a petty thief, yet congress by means of a dishonest schedule continues to protect it in bleeding the public.

At the very time the duties on manufactured rubber were raised the leader of the senate, in company with the Guggenheim syndicate, was organizing an international rubber trust, whose charter made it also a holding company for the coal and copper deposits of the whole world.

For a dozen years the demand of the nation for the pure food and drug bill was outweighed in congress by the interests which asserted their right to poison the people for a profit.

Congress refused to authorize the preparation of a great plan of waterway development in the general interest and for ten years has declined to pass the Appalachian and White mountain national forest bill, although the people are practically unanimous for both.

The whole nation is in favor of protecting the coal and other natural resources in Alaska, yet the withdrawal bill, under the circumstances the one conservation bill most needed for the purpose, is still in danger. And, as for the general conservation movement, congress not only refused to help it on, but tried to forbid any progress without its help. Fortunately for us all, in this attempt it has utterly failed.

Lose Confidence in Congress.

This loss of confidence in congress is a matter for deep concern to every thinking American. It has not come quickly or without good reason. Every man who knows congress well knows the names of senators and members who betray the people they were elected to represent and knows also the names of the masters whom they obey. A representative of the people who wears the collar of the special interests has touched bottom. He can sink no further.

Who is to blame because representatives of the people are so commonly led to betray their trust? We all are—we who have not taken the trouble to resent and put an end to the knavery we knew was going on. The brand of politics served out to us by the professional politician has long been composed largely of hot meals for the interests and hot air for the people, and we have all known it.

Political platforms are not sincere statements of what the leaders of a party really believe, but rather forms of words which those leaders think they can get others to believe they believe. The realities of the regular political game lie at present far beneath the surface, many of the issues advanced are mere empty sound, while the issues really at stake must be sought deep down in the politics of business—in politics for revenue only. All this the people realize as they never did before, and, what is more, they are ready to act on their knowledge.

Some of the men who are responsible for the union of business and politics may be profoundly dishonest, but more of them are not. They were trained in a wrong school, and they cannot forget their training. Clay hardens by immobility, men's minds by standing pat. Both lose the power to take new impressions. Many of the old style leaders regard the political truths which alone insure the progress of the nation and will hereafter completely dominate it as the mere meaningless babble of political infants. They have grown old in the belief that money has the right to rule, and they can never understand the point of view of the men who recognize in the corrupt political activity of a railroad or a trust a most dangerous kind of treason to government by the people.

Party Leaders Go Wrong.

When party leaders go wrong it requires high sense of public duty, true courage and strong belief in the people for a man in politics to take his future in his hands and stand against them.

The black shadow of party regularity as the supreme test in public affairs has passed away from the public mind. It is a great deliverance. The man in the street no longer asks about a measure or a policy merely whether it is good Republican or good Democratic doctrine. Now he asks whether it is honest and means what it says, whether it will promote the public interest, weaken special privilege and help to give every man a fair chance. If it will it is good, no matter who proposed it. If it will not it is bad, no matter who defends it.

It is a greater thing to be a good citizen than to be a good Republican or a good Democrat.

The protest against politics for revenue only is as strong in one party as in the other, for the servants of the interests are plentiful in both. In that respect there is little to choose between them.

Differences of purpose and belief between political parties today are vastly less than the differences within the parties. The great gulf of division which strikes across our whole people pays little heed to fading party lines or to any distinction in name only. The vital separation is between the partisans of government by money for profit and the believers in government by men for human welfare.

When political parties come to be badly led, when their leaders lose touch with the people, when their object ceases to be everybody's welfare and becomes somebody's profit, it is time to change the leaders. One of the most significant facts of the time is that the professional politicians appear to be wholly unaware of the great moral change which has come over political thinking in the last decade. They fail to see that the political dogmas, the political slogans and the political methods of the past generation have lost their power and that our people have come at last to judge of politics by the eternal rules of right and wrong.

Morality in Politics.

A new life is stirring among the dry bones of formal platforms and artificial issues. Morality has broken into politics. Political leaders, trust bred and trust fed, find it harder and harder to conceal their actual character. The brass bound collar of privilege has become plain upon their necks for all men to see. They are known for what they are, and their time is short. But when they come to be retired it will be of little use to replace an unfaithful public servant who wears the collar by another public servant with the same collar around his neck. Above all, what we need in office are free men representing a free people.

The motto in every primary, in every election, should be this: No watchdogs of the interests need apply.

The old order, standing pat in dull misunderstanding of the great forward sweep of a nation determined on honesty and publicity in public affairs, is already wearing thin under the ceaseless hammering of the progressive onset. The demand of the people for political progress will not be denied. Does any man not blinded by personal interest or by the dust of political dry rot suppose that the bulk of our people are anything else but progressive? If such there be, let him ask the young men in whose minds the policies of tomorrow first see the light.

The people of the United States demand a new deal and a square deal. They have grasped the fact that the special interests are now in control of public affairs. They have decided once more to take control of their own business. For the last ten years the determination to do so has been swelling like a river. They insist that the special interests shall go out of politics or out of business, one or the other. And the choice will lie with the interests themselves. If they resist, both the interests and the people will suffer. If wisely they accept the inevitable the adjustment will not be hard. It will do their business no manner of harm to make it conform to the general welfare. But, one way or the other, conform it must.

Who Shall Govern?

The overshadowing question before the American people today is this: Shall the nation govern itself or shall the interests run this country? The one great political demand underlying all others, giving meaning to all others, is this: The special interests must get out of politics. The old style leaders, seeking to switch public attention away from this one absorbing and overwhelming issue, are pitifully ridiculous and out of date. To try to divert the march of an aroused public conscience from this righteous inevitable conflict by means of obsolete political catchwords is like trying to dam the Mississippi with dead leaves.

To drive the special interests out of politics is a vast undertaking, for in politics lies their strength. If they resist, as doubtless they will, it will call for nerve, endurance and sacrifice on the part of the people. It will be no child's play, for the power of privilege is great. But the power of our people is greater still, and their steadfastness is equal to the need. The task is a tremendous one both in the demands it will make and the rewards it will bring. It must be undertaken soberly, carried on firmly and justly and relentlessly followed to the very end. Two things alone can bring success. The first is honesty in public men, without which no popular government can long succeed. The second is complete publicity of all the affairs in which the public has an interest, such as the business of corporations and political expenses during campaigns and between them. To these ends many unfaithful public servants must be retired, much wise legislation must be framed and passed, and the struggle will be bitter and long. But it will be well worth all it will cost, for self government is at stake.

No Legislative Cure-all.

There can be no legislative cure-all for great political evils, but legislation can make easier the effective expression and execution of the popular will. One step in this direction which I personally believe should be taken without delay is a law forbidding any senator or member of congress or other public servant to perform any services for any corporation engaged in interstate commerce or to accept any valuable consideration, directly or indirectly, from any such corporation while he is a representative of the people and for a reasonable time thereafter. If such a law would be good for the nation in its affairs a similar law should be good for the states and the cities in their affairs. And I see no reason why members and senators and state legislators should not keep the people informed of their pecuniary interest in interstate or public service corporations, if they have any. It is certain such publicity would do the public no harm.

This nation has decided to do away with government by money for profit and return to the government our forefathers died for and gave to us—government by men for human welfare and human progress.

Opposition to progress has produced its natural results. There are profound dissatisfaction and unrest and profound cause for both. Yet the country is awake. For a generation at least there has not been a situation so promising for the ultimate public welfare as that of today. Our people are like a hive of bees—full of agitation before taking flight to a better place. Also they are ready to sting. Out of the whole situation shines the confident hope of better things. If any man is discouraged let him consider the rise of cleaner standards in this country within the last ten years.

The task of translating these new standards into action lies before us. From sea to sea the people are taking a fresh grip on their own affairs. The conservation of political liberty will take its proper place alongside the conservation of the means of living, and in both we shall look to the permanent welfare of the plain people as the supreme end. The way out lies in direct interest of the people in their own affairs and direct action in the few great things that really count.

What is the conclusion of the whole matter? The special interests must be put out of politics. I believe the young men will do it.

Behind a Tree.

Two old backwoodsmen had a dispute over a line fence that became a feud that nothing but bloodshed would settle. They agreed to take their squirrel rifles, go out into the woods, stand thirty paces apart and fire at the count of three until one or the other or both were killed. They went out to the woods. Presently one of the combatants came back, dragging his gun and very indignant.

"That there man is a coward!" he shouted. "He's a coward, and he don't fight fair. When we stood up thar and the count began he jumped behind a tree at the word two. He don't fight fair. Think of his gittin' behind a tree."

"Well," asked a listener, "what did you do?"

"Why," said the indignant one, "what could I do? You see, his gittin' behind a tree just naturally throwed me behind a tree too."—Saturday Evening Post.

GUARDING AGAINST EARTHQUAKE.

Mr. Frank A. Perret, formerly honorary assistant at Royal Vesuvian observatory, was one of those who remained at that post of duty during the great eruption of 1906. He has since studied at close range the volcano at Stromboli in action; in 1907 he predicted that a great disturbance of Aetna was impending, and he was on his way to Sicily when the Messina tragedy took place. Writing of "The Messina Earthquake" in the "Century," Mr. Perret declares its lesson a two-fold one—and the freshness of the San Francisco horror brings the warning home:

"Those who live in earthquake districts should build their houses to withstand these vibrations of the ground. This is feasible, and it is to be hoped that all ruined towns will be rebuilt accordingly. But it is manifestly too much to expect that existing cities in earthquake districts will be torn down and rebuilt, and therefore those who favor the spending of large sums of money for astronomical and other research work should also favor its expenditure for the proper study of the world on which we live, in order that we may learn its secrets and foretell its movements, and thus prevent a great earthquake from being also a great disaster. This, too, is feasible, and it is a matter of vital importance to humanity.

"May it not be hoped that this last great catastrophe, with its hideous loss of human life and its enormous total cost, will cause the lesson to be taken to heart?"

BLOW AT STOCK YARDS

Government to Act Under Hepburn Rail Rate Law.

Complaint Is That the Big Stock Yards Company at Chicago Is Maintaining a Monopoly.

Chicago, June 13.—W. A. Kenyon, assistant to Attorney General Wickersham in Washington, is in Chicago to file a suit in the United States court against the Union Stock Yards company. According to Washington dispatches the suit will be unique in that it is under the Hepburn railway rate act. The complaint is that the stock yards company is maintaining a monopoly of the cattle shipment business of Chicago and is violating the Hepburn act by its relations with cattle raisers and those who purchase cattle. The officials expressed surprise when told the suit was to be filed. A. G. Leonard, vice president and general manager was asked:

"Is the company a monopoly, and can it fix arbitrary rates?"

"We do not compel shippers or buyers of stock to come here," he replied. "We cannot be blamed if there is no competition."

RURALS CHASE BANDITS

Natived Fleeing With Families as Result of Robberies.

Santanon Gang Has Battle With Rurals in Which One Is Shot from Ambush—Attempt Train Wreck.

Mexico City, June 13.—A dispatch from Tierra Blanca, state of Vera Cruz, says, farmers are fleeing with their families from the district in the vicinity of Rives, Island Juanita, as a result of the robberies which took place in lower Vera Cruz nine days ago. Bandits, under the leadership of Santanon, a notorious chief and outlaw, are still in the neighborhood of Isla.

Santanon and his band were reported to have passed Rives station. Twelve rurals arrived at Rives on June 5 and have since been scouring the country in the neighborhood. Another company of rurales is reported working near Sanborn station, a district infested with bandits and rubber thieves.

It is reported here that one rural was killed in one of the engagements. He is said to have been shot from ambush by the Santanon gang. His body was riddled with bullets and the bandits escaped with the rural's horse and arms. The bandits attempted to wreck the southbound passenger train at Isla.

POSTAL SAVINGS BANK BILL TO PASS

Adjournment of House and Senate to Come This Week.

SOLONS ANXIOUS TO GO HOME

Anti-injunction and Other Administration Bills to Go Over to Next Session—Action Today Leaves Matters in Ship Shape.

Washington, June 20.—Although no agreement has been reached, it is now practically certain that congress will adjourn between now and next Saturday. Some of the senate and house optimists think Thursday will be a good guess, but others say Saturday. Acting on these suggestions, many of the rank and file of the house have made Pullman reservations for the end of the week. Everybody in the lower branch of congress seems to be anxious to get back home.

The railroad bill and the statehood bill are out of the way, the postal savings bank bill in the form in which it passed the house, will be agreed to by the senate today and the conservation bill, with a compromise $20,000,000 reclamation bond proposition tacked to it, will go through with a whiz. So barring a lot of routine, the slate is pretty nearly clear. President Taft has gone publically on record in favor of the bill for the publicity of campaign contributions which has passed the house and has been slumbering in the senate for sometime. His wishes, together with the public clamor for the enactment of this legislation, will very likely result in favorable action by the senate upon it. There was some talk in that body of reporting out of the house bill with an amendment making the publicity of campaign contributions effective after election, not ten days before as the measure now provides.

The anti-injunction measure, another administration bill will go over until next session. The president told senate and house leaders a couple of weeks ago to push along the other measures enumerated and let this lie over. He thinks it can wait better than any of the others. It has become known that the postal savings bill which passed the house will be agreed to by the senate. There were several conferences at the White House attended by Senators Crane of Massachusetts, Carter of Montana, who has charge of the postal savings bank bill, and others particularly interested in the bill. The president let it be known that he favored the house bill and not the senate bill and it is said that the senate will concur in the house bill today.

There are still a number of bills in conference, including the sundry civil bill, but it is admitted that with an adjournment date agreed upon there would be no trouble in closing up these propositions in short order. The public building bill will be taken up in the house today and probably passed. This bill leaves everything in excellent shape in the house and it is said that by the middle of the week will see some definite agreement on adjournment.

JEFFRIES GOES TO RENO

Rickard Decides Big Fight Will Be Held There.

Ordering Out of Militia to Prevent the Kaufman-Langford Bout Decides the Promotor.

San Francisco, June 20.—Fearing that his orders to the police to stop the Kaufman-Langford fight would not be obeyed, Governor Gillett ordered Adjutant-General Lauke to hold four companies of militia at the armory in readiness to compel the police to carry out the law.

Tex Rickard practically decided on Reno, Nev., as the battle ground for the big heavyweight title contest and the word was quietly sent out to this effect. On an order issued by Sam Berger, manager for Jeffries, the unbeaten heavyweight broke camp and started with bag and baggage for Reno to finish his training. It is said Johnson will follow. Jeff said he was assured Reno would be the spot.

Rickard, when he learned that Governor Gillett, District Attorney Fickert and officers of the militia had all agreed that the Kaufman-Langford fight should not take place here, declared that the jig was up, and the big fight would not take place in San Francisco.

STORM WRECKS HUGE CRANE

Misintrepation of Message Causes Idea That Battleship Is Destroyed.

New York, June 20.—Two telegrams sent from the Brooklyn navy yard Saturday to officials of the navy department in Washington were misintrepretated. It was at first through that the battleship Florida had been wrecked in the storm of Saturday.

It later transpired, however, that what the message should have noted was the partial wreckage of the floating crane Hercules, used to place in position the armour plate on the uncompleted battleship. The damage to the huge crane will amount to $100,000, but it will be repaired at once.

South Bend, Ind., June 20. — Labor Day will be observed in South Bend this year on a more elaborate scale than has ever been attempted in this part of the state.

In the parade, which will be held on the morning of the holiday, the solid strength of the unions in practically every city within a radius of 100 miles of South Bend, including Chicago, will take part.

SENATOR LORIMER WILL GO ON STAND

State Officials May Also Be Called on to Testify.

DETECTIVES FIND NEW WITNESS

Man Found Who Was in Senator Broderick's Saloon When Senator Holstlaw Entered to Receive His $2,500.

Chicago, June 20. — United States Senator William Lorimer has come out into the open as an aid to Lee O'Neil Browne in the state legislator's trial for bribing lawmakers to vote for Lorimer. He joined in a conference with Browne and the latter's lawyers in the Ashland block office of Attorney W. S. Forrest.

The senator previously had placed at the disposal of the defense two letters written him by Representative Charles A. White, whose confession that he was paid $1,000 by Browne for voting for Lorimer was the basis of the indictment.

One of the most important decisions of the gathering, which was attended by Attorneys W. S. Forrest, P. H. O'Donnell, and C. E. Erbstein, was that both Lorimer and Browne shall take the witness stand for the defense late in the trial. Browne will deny that he bought votes for Lorimer, who will deny that he authorized or knew of such payments.

Gloom settled over the meeting when word was brought that State Senator John Broderick, indicted at Springfield for paying State Senator D. W. Holstlaw $2,500 for voting for Lorimer, would "come through" if Brown were convicted.

Moreover, a new witness is said to have been found by two detectives, who have been working on the Broderick case in Chicago, while Prosecutor Burke has been enjoying a week's recess of the grand jury at Springfield. The man thus located was in Broderick's saloon when Senator Holstlaw was present on the day he says he received the $2 500.

Word from Springfield indicated several state officers may appear as witnesses in the trial of Browne.

Just what phase of the case the state officials are expected to have information upon is not known. Lieut.-Gov. John G. Oglesby, State Auditor James S. McCullough, and Secretary of State James A. Rose may be among those subpoenaed, as they received telephone communications from the sheriff of Cook county during the day that subpoenas were prepared in the city for them, but that no orders had yet been given to serve them.

It was reported at Springfield that State Treasurer Russell also received notice that a subpoena was awaiting him in Chicago, but Mr. Russell said he received no notification to that effect. Gov. Deneen was also asked concerning a notice of subpoena and he said he had no knowledge of any.

The inquiry will be conducted during recess. No report will be made before next December.

COL. ROOSEVELT REFUSES TO TALK

Informs Scribes That His Life Henceforth Is to Be Private.

SENATOR LODGE SUNDAY GUEST

Mr. Roosevelt Resumes Editorship of Outlook Wednesday—Will Attend Son's Marriage Today—Attends Church.

ROOSEVELT'S ADDRESS

"I thank you, Mayor Gaynor. And through you I thank your committee; through them I wish to thank the American people for their greeting. I need hardly say that I am most deeply moved by the reception given me. No man could receive such a greeting without being made to feel both very proud and very humble.

"I have been away a year and a quarter from America. I have seen strange and interesting things alike in the heart of the frowning wilderness and in the capitals of the mightiest and most highly polished of civilized nations.

"I have thoroughly enjoyed myself, and now I am more glad than I can say to get home, to be back in my own country, back among people I love.

"And I am eager to do my part so far as I am able in helping solve problems which must be solved if we of this, the greatest democratic republic on which the sun has ever shown, are to see its destinies rise to the level of our hopes and its opportunities.

"This is the duty of every citizen, but it is particularly my duty, for any man who has ever been honored by being made president of the United States is thereby forever after rendered the debtor of the American people and is bound throughout his life to remember this as his prime obligation, and in private life as much as in public life so to carry himself that the American people may never have cause to feel regret that they onec placed him at their head."—Col. Roosevelt's reply to Mayor Gaynor's address of welcome.

Oyster Bay, N. Y., June 20.—Privacy that's the word. Absolute impenetrable, double-riveted, non-leakable, continuous and all prevasive privacy with only two loopholes a week. That was the gist of a very courteous, but very crisp, few moments of conversation on the part of Col. Roosevelt. What he does, what he thinks, how he amuses himself, whom he receives, these and several other items about which the public has been accustomed to have a fair working knowledge are to become known only at the bi-weekly chats which he will submit to in the offices of the Outlook, where he will begin his editorship in person on Wednesday next.

But, notwithstanding this reticence in details, the colonel made no effort to convey the impression that in his capacity as a private citizen he has abjured the society of public men. Senator Lodge was a house guest at Sagamore Hill over Sunday and Secretary of the Navy Meyer dropped in by way of the Dolphin and Long Island sound for a talk. These impressions were gained when the ex-president came out on his veranda to receive several inquiring callers. His last word to them in answer to a question about his African trip was this: "Now, gentlemen," he said, "I really have not anything to say on any subject whatever. I don't want to have anybody get in the habit of coming to me with the idea that I am going to talk, for I'm not going to do it at all. Beyond going into town this morning for my son's wedding and on Wednesday for my first visit to the Outlook office since I have been back, I haven't anything to tell. My life here from now on is to be private If I began telling about all these things, the result would be that I shouldn't have any peace or rest or vacation this summer.

Church time in Oyster Bay is 10:45. A very few moments before that, a big comfortable car rolled under the porte cochere of the church. The colonel was in the tonneau and with him were Mrs. Roosevelt, Mrs. H. A. Alexander, Miss Alexander, who is the fiancee of Theodore Jr., that young man himself and his brother Quentin. In another automobile just behind were Ethel Roosevelt, Isabel S. Hagner, Mrs. Roosevelt's special secretary, and Archie. After the service Mr. Roosevelt went to his home.

A HANDSOME TIP.

Visit of an American Girl to an English Ancestral Home.

By DOROTHEA HALE.

(Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.)

Miss Mildred Van Tromp, an American multimillionairess in London, cared nothing for marrying a title, but she did care for the castles of old England. Miss Van Tromp's cousin, Miss Adele Sherman, was with her.

One morning the two tourists took a train at a London railway station, intending to visit Halloween castle, the residence of the Duke of Ellston. On the journey they chatted about the castle they were going to see, referring occasionally to their guidebook. A gentleman in the same compartment sitting opposite them, who had been buried in his paper, spoke up:

"If you ladies are going to visit Halloween castle I fear you will be disappointed. It will not be open today to visitors."

"The castle is only shown during the duke's absence. He returns today."

Miss Sherman, who usually acted as spokesman, thanked the gentleman for his information and asked if there was any one in service at the castle who for a handsome tip would make an exception in their case. To this he replied:

"I am going to the castle myself and shall see the duke. I think it probable that I can secure his permission to show you through his ancestral abode. If you will be there"—he took out his watch—"at, say, 2 o'clock I will let you know what I can do for you. Ask for Mr. Comyns."

The ladies thanked the man for his courtesy and when the train reached the station went to an inn, where they partook of a luncheon, then strolled up to the castle. They were stopped at the postern by a lackey, but on mentioning the name of Comyns they were conducted to a reception room in the living apartments of the castle. After a wait of ten minutes Mr. Comyns entered and said that he had obtained the necessary permission.

Mr. Comyns was between thirty and thirty-five years old. It was seldom that he smiled, but when he did his face changed from the serious to the genial. He was apparently a gentleman, but there are many grades of gentlemen in England, and the girls could not make out to which grade he belonged. They fancied that he might attend to some business for the duke or was his solicitor or was there to sell him something. One point troubled them from the first—they feared he might not be so respectable, though he had avoided the subject of tips, as to decline a crown or two if offered to him. They had often received favors or what they supposed were favors from men just as genteel looking whose palm they had crossed. Miss Van Tromp determined to watch his English. If he were not a gentleman he would surely make a blunder, perhaps in an unguarded moment drop an "h."

All this they talked and thought over while waiting. Mr. Comyns led them out into the courtyard and thence to one of the towers. He began in that clear, well modulated voice with which the two girls had heard the gentlemanly guides in Westminster abbey show that old pile for the modest sum of sixpence. This confirmed their opinion that he would expect a tip. He spoke fluently and as if he had often before reeled off the identical words.

"This tower," he said, was built in the reign of William II. and is, of course, Norman. The upper part was put on later and is Gothic. A breach was made here where you see a difference in the stonework by the Roundheads during the close of the war by which Charles I. lost his rascally head."

Surprised at this, Miss Van Tromp asked:

"Does the duke consider King Charles I. rascally?"

"It doesn't matter to me what the duke thinks. Everybody knows that Charles I. was treacherous, mean, untrue to his friends and altogether unworthy of sovereignty."

"Does your British nobility usually take that ground?" asked Miss Sherman.

"I don't know. The opinions of most of them are worth nothing anyway."

The girls were puzzled. How dare this man within the ancestral home of one of the British aristocrats speak so disrespectfully of them? Presently their guide led them into the gallery of family portraits.

"This old fellow up there was the Earl of Habersham and became the first duke of Ellston. He got rich by robbery and was made a duke for stabbing in the back a man the king wished put out of the way."

The girls looked at each other, astonished at this frankness with regard to the present duke's ancestors.

"That red faced man," continued Mr. Comyns, "was the first duke's brother. He was a pirate."

"A pirate!" exclaimed both the girls at once.

"Certainly. That was once considered a very respectable calling. That one with scars on his face was a robber. He kept up this place by descending into the valley, looting travelers and returning with his booty."

"Were all the duke's ancestors bad?" asked Miss Van Tromp.

"Most of them. I know all about the family. Scarcely a good one in it."

"But the present duke is a fine man, I am told."

"I should like to know in what way. He sits in the house of lords—a useless institution—with his hat down over his eyes, most of the time asleep. When he is here he is bored to death. When I told him that two American girls wished to see his castle he proposed to show you about himself, just to have something to do. I told him it was my job and he shouldn't take it away from me."

There was more wonder in the faces of the young women, and the last words decided them that they must offer a tip.

"The castle is a dilapidated old place," continued the guide, "not worth preserving. I think the duke would like to sell it to some of your American millionaires."

"How could he bear to part with that which has descended to him through centuries?"

"He likes London pretty well. With the money he could get for this rattletrap place he could enjoy himself very well in London."

"How much would he take for it?"

"Oh, a matter of £100,000."

"Please tell him that I'll give him that for it."

It was now Mr. Comyns' turn to look surprised. He made no reply at first, then said:

"From whom shall I tell him the offer comes?"

Miss Van Tromp took out a card, wrote her London address on it and handed it to Mr. Comyns. They had by this time gone the rounds and were at the postern. And now the terrible question of the tip came up. Miss Van Tromp decided that she would give one so large that even should their guide be a gentleman he might not feel insulted. She put five sovereigns into his hand. He took them unwillingly and thrust them into his pocket.

Two days later an invitation came from the dowager Duchess of Halloween to Miss Van Tromp and Miss Sherman to dine with her at her London residence. The invitation closed with these words, "You can then talk over the sale of Halloween castle with my son, the duke."

Miss Van Tromp, whose income for one year was more than the price she had offered for the property, was not at all frightened. At first she thought she would adhere to her resolution not to mingle with the English nobility and decline the invitation, but Miss Sherman persuaded her to accept. They were to sail for America the next week, and Miss Van Tromp was not averse to dining with a duchess so long as it could be done without the preliminary presentation at court.

On the evening appointed they drove to the duke's home. They were received by the dowager duchess, a pleasant old lady, and after a time who should enter the room but Mr. Comyns in evening dress. He advanced, smiling, to welcome the guests.

"My son," said the duchess.

"A younger son?" asked Miss Van Tromp.

"No; I'm Ralph Comyns and Duke of Ellston," said the gentleman. "As I told you, I'm a bored man when at Hallowen, and I passed a delightful hour in showing you my pile. But I shall not hold you to the offer, and here," taking five sovereigns from his vest pocket, "is the fee you gave me. I really don't think I should have accepted it."

There was a twinkle in his eye as he spoke.

"I am ready to give you a check for the castle," said Miss Van Tromp, a trifle ruffled at having been deceived.

"That's just like you Americans," replied the duke, smiling. "There's nothing so old, so new, so valuable or so worthless but that you are ready to buy it."

"I might hold you by law to the bargain. I can prove by my cousin, Miss Sherman, who was present, that you offered the property, for a specified sum and I accepted the offer."

"I should rather be bound by it than go to law with such a charming opponent," replied the duke gallantly.

There was nothing more said about the sale, and after Miss Van Tromp had recovered from her chagrin at having tipped a duke the dinner proved a very enjoyable one. Miss Van Tromp and her cousin did not sail on the steamer on which they had engaged passage. Indeed, they remained in London for some time. Miss Van Tromp fell into the same matrimonial conditions as most American heiresses abroad. She married the Duke of Halloween.

CHICAGO STREET UP TO DATE

You have heard so much of late of the old time scenes and places on Chicago street that I think maybe some of you who have lived in Tecumseh years ago would like to know something of Chicago street as it is now. Let us start from the west end and south side of the street and investigate. It is a deplorable fact the old agricultural works stand empty, when it is such a fine location for some business. The wire fence business outgrew its bounds and had to move to larger quarters; a little shop stands next where Chas. Bartholomew does repair work on bicycles and other machinery. Another little box of a shop is occupied by Wm. Hazlett who does repairing, cleaning and pressing of ladies and men's clothing. A large three story block is next built by Wm. Witherell of cement blocks. The first floor is in two stores, one used as a meat market and the other by Will Coller with a Tecumseh fishing tackle Co., the next floor is used as a public hall and the third is occupied by the I. O. O. F.

Next, where for years a saloon has held forth is a bowling alley. As has been for so long with changes in owners is a fine bakery kept by S. J. Kerr. George Merritt's cigar store has been converted into a most commodious drug store and is owned and run by Ben J. Pulver where the old drug store used to be for many years is a very fine ice cream parlor, up to date in every particular.

Next in line is a double store, in one part is a harness shop and on the east half a barber shop over these Dr. Frost has his office rooms.

Lilley State Bank occupies the same place as in years agone over it the G. A. R. and T. B. A. have their quarters. Whitenack and Co. have their hardware store in the same place that has been used for that business by different firms from year to year. A "Smoke House" comes next with pool tables and all the accessories that go to make smoke etc. On the corner where of old B. J. Bidwell, A. Cotton and Harris & Hiteshue have carried dry goods, Fred Rosacrans & Sons are holding forth and will be pleased to show you their line in dry goods and carpets etc. etc.

Crossing the railroad you will find the McCann Bros. ready to show you their line of men's clothing. Uncle Sam occupies the next place with an up to date post office and if you don't get what you ask for it is not the fault of the force employed to run the business.

Gaston & Son with Jewelry, Clocks, watches etc. have the next position and if you wish will sell you a ticket for anywhere on the L. S. & M. S. railroad. The Webster Anderson Dry Goods Co. occupy the next two stores with a full line of goods and next door you can buy your shoes of J. J. Belcher. Ernest Coller will furnish you the finest music in the next place or sell you a sewing machine. Another shoe man John Nyland will greet you with a pleasant smile and show you a fine line of ladie's men's and children's foot wear.

James Jones & Son are ready to make the best in coats, vests and trousers for any one desiring the same, while Dave Macham will give any man a fine hair cut or a clean shave. For headwear Miss Pierce will show you a fine line large small or medium with flowers and feathers galore.

The better to keep you neat comes the Steam Laundry with their efficient workers and as by this time you are hungry you can drop into Hause meat market and buy a roast to suit your taste.

E. J. Peters & Co. will try and keep you moving on time and will fit you out with silver, glass are and everything nice. Don't you all remember the Hewitt house? It stands next and you all would recognize it. Williamson Bros. have their grocery and produce store on the corner and here we will give you time to note the changes.

The Mechanic a Master.

A mechanic is one who is skilled in the use of tools, who works habitually in some kind of material to shape it, who makes thereof something useful. He is, therefore, an artisan or artificer. He practices always some kind of elaborative industry, by which materials are changed in form to adapt them to the use of others. Finally he is a utilitarian. His works are designed to supply some need. As distinguished from an artist, who works in order to give pleasure, this man toils to feed the hungry, to clothe the naked, to house the shelterless, to enable all mankind to do their work, whatever it may be. The modern mechanic is absolute master of the earth. There is little that he cannot lift, remove, dissolve, penetrate, transform. A catalog of his tools and appliances would define all the trades and industries to the world. All material resources of the earth, minerals, vegetables, animals are his. The winds, the waters, the fires, the sunlight, the lightning are his servants. He understands the nature and transformation of forces, the constitution and molecular activities of matter the Nature of living beings. Pray to Pigs.

The native of Borneo prays to a pig on all important occasions. If he fears enemies, ill luck or sickness is coming the pig is brought into the hut with its legs tied together. A lighted brand is applied to scotch it slightly, then the pig is asked about the matter which the natives want to know.

I want to tell our readers just a little of two memorial days which were observed here in Long Beach.

Mothers Day our principal churches some dozen or more observed the day with appropriate exercises and decorations. One lady alone furnished the Congregational church with 5000 white carnations, and the Christian church with 2500. Other churches use thousands of different varieties of flowers in their decorations.

Decoration Day the exercises were appropriate and impressive. In the morning procession were 196 old war veterans, 50 members of the W. R. C., 40 women of the G. A. R., a goodly number of the Sons of Veterans and about 700 school children. Proceeding to the park where a temporary monument had been erected, the services usual at soldiers monuments were held and the shaft was completely covered with wreaths of flowers and evergreens while the top of the large base was heaped with boquets of the choicest flowers.

After the exercise at the monument the procession reformed with cities municipal band and the fife and drum corps in the lead proceeded to the end of the pier to observe the custom, originating in Long Beach, of strewing flowers on the waves in honor of the sailor dead. While thousands of flowers were thrown from the pier, a number of ladies boarded a launch and were taken a short distance out where many more flowers were cast on the waters following by a salute by the firing squad. One of the many beautiful floral pieces with which the waves were strewn was a magnificent harp made by of 10,000 red carnations.

At 11 o'clock occurred the indoor exercises which were similar to all such but more elaborate than usual and were listened to by about 1500 people. At 2 p. m. a goodly number of veterans and their friends were taken in autos to the cemetery to decorate the graves of their dead comrades, thus ending the day.

W. P STOCKING.

P. S. Dear patient reader: I can't let you off without telling you of a little (?) California flower garden which is situated nine miles north west of this city and contains only 676 acres and is owned by John Bodger. 516 acres are all in sweet peas alone which are raised for the seed which he ships to many states. One can ride for many miles along one side of the ranch without losing the sight or odor of millions of these blossoms.

There are 160 acres set to other flowers—carnations, roses, begonias, centurras, violets, and many other varieties, all grown for the seed. Mr. Bodger says that the flowers are so variegated that it is hard to keep his varieties distinct.

New blends are yearly cropping out. The flowers grow with but little irrigation, Mr. Bodger takes pride in taking people over the place and explaining his business to them.

Our quake and tidal wave as reported in Eastern papers was only the product of a brain storm raging in some reporters cranium. The quake was so slight that we, with very many of the Long Beach citizens, knew nothing of it. No damage whatever was done in those places named in the report, that one ever heard of outside of those reports. As for the tidal wave at Long Beach, there was no more tidal wave here than in Tecumseh.

PROGRESS OF CREMATION

Many people will feel an interest in the recent annual meeting of the Cremation society of England and the report of its work. This society was organized in 1874 by Sir Henry Thompson, and its first cremation took place in 1885. According to John Storer Cobb's "Quarter Century of Cremation in North America," the number of cremations in London in 1900 was 301, and the number in Great Britain was 451. The total number in London up to that time was 1824 and in Great Britain 2482. The number in England in 1907 was said at the anniversary meeting to be 705.

Cremation is much more popular in this country than in Europe. Down to and including 1900 there had been in all Europe only 14,684 cremations, the largest numbers in single countries being 4261 in Germany and 4119 in Italy, while in the United States there had been 27,965.

Harnessing the Winds.

Denmark, a low country lying between two seas, has plenty of wind, and it is utilizing it on a scale that has never been equaled before. Windmills have been used for time out of mind to pump water and to grind grain. Their appropriation of the unlimited power rushing by them has been restricted, as it has not been possible to store the energy or to combine effectively the forces of several windmills or make the hurricane surplus energy do duty in days of calm.

These defects are cured by converting the wind power into electricity and equalizing its use through the storage battery. Denmark is taking advantage of this to convert its wind power into electric power for commercial purposes. It is stated that a wind of fifteen miles an hour will produce eight horse power, and that a twenty-mile gale will develop eighteen horse power. As the power of many windmills can be concentrated and made to serve a single plant, there is infinite possibility in this resource in any section blessed with frequent winds of considerable force.

The United States has abundant wind-swept territory. The seashores, prairies and highlands everywhere have an unlimited supply of this force. It can be converted into electric power and combined and stored for use as readily here as in Denmark. The utilization of this wind power would lessen the drain on our diminishing wood and coal supplies and supplement the water power as a means of furnishing the land with electric energy for commercial pur-

ALASKA WANTS MORE SETTLERS

Miners, Farmers and Laborers Needed in the Northwest.

COPPER CAMPS OPEN IN JULY

Amazing Alaska has just reappeared in the limelight, showing another new phase. While folks here at home are howling that the riches of the northern territory should be kept for the people, Alaska is crying that the people do not want the riches badly enough to go there after them and that as a result the territory is beginning its summer exceedingly short handed. There are literally not even enough people to do the work in hand, let alone to develop the new opportunities.

The first complaint came from Fairbanks a few weeks ago. Press dispatches said that a large percentage of the miners in the camp had deserted to join the stampede to the new Iditarod and Innoko gold diggings and more were going as soon as the ice went out of the rivers. A labor famine was threatened, and it still seems likely that the estimated $9,000,000 of gold from the spring clean-up will be heavily cut next spring for lack of men to take it out. Other established camps report the same difficulty in getting labor, and the agencies of the Pacific coast are being appealed to.

Ore Shipments Soon.

From the railroads also there is a big demand for men. The Copper River and Northwestern especially is trying to increase its force, as it is rushing construction so as to reach the mouth of the Chitina river by July 1. This is the gateway to the copper country, and a few weeks thereafter the rails will be in the heart of this undeveloped and little prospected region.

By October the road is expected to reach the Bonanza mine, and a large force will be at work on the property all summer so that ore shipments can begin as soon as the rails reach the bins. In the meantime several of the thirty or forty properties along the line of the railroad are going to begin large development. All this takes skilled men, and apparently they are not to be had. Thus a new problem takes the place of the old. Heretofore development has been impeded because of the tremendous cost of getting supplies into a wilderness without roads of any sort. Experts agree that this is one of the most promising copper regions in the world, and it is unique in that from being almost inaccessible it will suddenly this summer have complete rail connections with tidewater and the steamer routes.

Farmers Badly Needed.

What Alaska asks for, therefore, even more than miners and laborers, are prospectors who will cover her new ground and give reasons for further development.

This year, too, Alaska is crying for farmers. All along the line of the railroad up the Chitina valley there is farming land which the agricultural department has reported favorably on, and in view of the large number of miners to be fed there promises to be a good local market for everything that can be raised. It is a pioneering country, of course, and new settlers will have to face pioneer conditions, but the success of farming and the bonanza rewards to be won in it when there are local markets has been well proved in the great Tanana valley of the interior and other sections.

The Alaska-Yukon Magazine, published at Seattle, the gateway to Alaska, is authority for the statement that within the next five years Alaska's population and the value of Alaska's products will be doubled. The completion of the Copper River and Northwestern railroad this year and the shipping of ore from the Kotsina-Chitina copper belt, together with the development of the Bering river coal fields, will create an industrial activity in this part of Alaska that will require greater population.

WHERE COFFEE COMES FROM.

Wonderful Estates That Occupy a Whole Province and Give Employment to Thousands.

Few of the millions of coffee drinkers in this country have anything but a hazy idea as to the real source of coffee. In a general, vague way the words "Mocha" and "Java" are mixed into the coffee information at hand, principally because these are found upon the battered tin canisters in the nearest grocery store.

Actually not 10 per cent of the coffee consumed in this country ever saw Arabia, where Mocha coffee comes from, or Java. By far the greater number of persons never tasted either. The bulk of coffee comes from the state of Sao Paulo, in Brazil, and the imports from that source alone supply nearly nine-tenths of the 1,900,000,000 pounds that we drink each year. Sao Paulo is little, but one vast coffee garden throughout its 174,688 square miles of territory, and, while there are many other industries, coffee growing is the chief and the true source of the wealth of the people.

Nearly all the billion and a half pounds of coffee grown in Brazil is shipped from the seacoast city of Santos, where are great docks at which lie the vessels of the world. Other countries grow coffee, to be sure, but not one in such vast quantities as does Brazil. So greatly has the Brazilian coffee grown in favor that the plant is now being taken abroad and cultivated. Now the department of agriculture is beginning to pay attention to the manner in which substitutes for good Brazilian coffee are being foisted on the American people under the false names of Mocha and Java.

Robin Superstition.

"It is unlucky to kill a robin" is a well-established saying in England. "How badly your hand shakes; you can scarcely write," said a teacher to a boy in school in England. "It always shakes," said the boy. "I once had a robin die in my hand and they say if a robin dies in your hand it will always shake."

HER

Sonny came to grandfather Dan, holding an old-fashioned gold locket in his hand—a locket curiously dented by a bullet.

"Did it save your life, grandfather?" he asked. "Why have you never told me about it before?"

Grandfather Dan took the locket and turned it slowly over in his trembling hand. "It belonged to Dave," he said, and then sat silently gazing at the distant hills. Sonny, too, was quiet, for Dave had been grandfather's dearly loved brother and comrade in arms, whom he could never talk about without great sorrow. Dave had died in Dan's arms, shot in the very first skirmish the young soldiers had entered.

"Go to my strong-box," said grandfather, at length, giving Sonny a key, "and bring to me the package in the lower left hand corner." Sonny hastened to obey and returned with a tiny packet wrapped in a bit of bunting.

"'Tis Dave's secret," said grandfather, "but I am going to tell you, for the locket will belong to you some day—soon—and you shall know about it."

"When Dave was shot, as you have often heard, I, beside him, caught him in my arms, and managed to drag him to shelter, although I, too, was hurt. You know all about it, except that I have never told you about 'Her.'" Sonny nodded. "Dave was always a favorite," continued grandfather, "and when we were marching South, the boys all used to tease him, but not knowing just which one of all the girls we left behind was Dave's sweetheart, we used to ask him about 'Her'—just her—not knowing any name. We all had farewell letters, but no one knew about Dave's.

"Well, when Dave lay dying"—his voice broke for a moment, but he soon went on—"he smiled at me, in all his pain, and whispered, 'Her picture is in the locket. Take it home to her, and tell her that I always loved her.' There was another silence, while grandfather gazed at the locket. Sonny dared not interrupt, but he handed the little package to grandfather, who carefully opened it. In it were three old, yellow letters, scarcely legible.

"Read them, Sonny," said grandfather, and Sonny read:

"'My Dear Dave,' said the first, 'you should not have been so worried about our parting. I shall be safe and well cared for while you are gone. It will be rather dull, with so many of our young men away, but I shall pay a visit to my cousin in the city for diversion, and I shall have a new gown to delight you when you return to your very loving Laura.'"

The second was shorter.

"Dear David," it said, "God be with you—that is what good-by means. I know that he will protect you and bring you safe home again to me. My prayers are ever with you. Trustingly yours,

"Emily."

There was another letter, not so carefully written, incorrectly spelled, and unsigned.

"Dear," said the third letter, "the love of a girl like me can never be a blessing—but, now that you are going away, I will confess. I love you dearly, David, dearly, and I want you to be happy. If I could only make you so—but you have money and education, and I have neither. Only a great love for you, David."

Those were all the letters. Sonny folded them carefully again and wrapped them in the rag—the farewell letters of a soldier.

"They tell so little, and so much," said grandfather. "Emily was the daughter of our pastor, a sweet and lovely girl, whom everyone honored. She died, unmarried, two years after the war was over. Laura was the village coquette—the prettiest, most fascinating little lady imaginable, but she thought always of herself, as even that bit of a letter shows. The other was the saddest of them all—a poor country girl, to whom David had been kind and courteous as he always was to all. Indeed, he had shown no special attention to any one of the three. And yet, he loved one of them."

"Which one?" asked Sonny. "To which one did the locket belong?" The boy tried hard in his own mind to determine which had won the soldier's heart. The old man shook his head and said nothing. "Grandfather," whispered Sonny, "won't you please tell me which one?" Grandfather sighed. "When I found the locket, hit by a bullet, as you see, the picture was gone. I have never known which one was 'Her,'" he said.

Another June Wedding

MILLS-SANFORD

On Thursday evening, June 16, at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Mills, their daugnter Mabel Dixon became the wife of Mr. George Sanford.

Miss Mills is a graduate of the Tecumseh High School and of the Michigan State Normal College, and has taught for four years in the Tecumseh High School. Mr. Sanford is a farmer who holds the confidence of all who know him So it is of especial interest to Tecumseh people to see these two unite their interests and found a home in our community.

An ideal home wedding was made of the occasion. The guests, about 60 in number, were received by the bride and groom. At 8 o'clock Miss Fitzsimmons of Grand Rapids, a cousin of the bride, sweetly sang "Love's Pleading," after which the Reverend Weld spoke the impressive words of the marriage ceremony.

The scene was a pretty one. The corner of the parlor where the couple stood was banked with peonies and iris, surrounded with a trellis of syringa. The other rooms of the spacious home were adorned with June roses. Mrs. Claude Crittenden, sister of the bride, played softly during the ceremony.

After the hearty good wishes and congratulations of the guests and the serving of a delicous supper by a number of the High School girls, Mr. and Mrs. Sanford departed for their home north east of the village.

Out of town guests were Miss Fitzsimmons, Mrs. Claude Crittenden and son of Grand Rapids, Professor Adelbert Mills of Cornell University; Miss Grace Comstock of Ypsilanti, Mrs. Clyde Barber and Mrs. Halleck Wilson of Detroit, Mr. and Mrs W. E. Wilson and son George of Graysville, O., Guy Belton and daughter of Detroit.

DIED AT MINERAL WATERS, TEXAS

The sad news has reached us of the death of H. E. Tribou at Mineral Waters, Texas where he went but a short time ago for his health. He had been in poor health for a long time but hopes were entertained that a change might be of benefit but it was too late as the disease had too firm a hold upon him and he passed away Saturday afternoon. Memorial Day

AMONG THE TECUMSEH FRATERNITIES

Sunday dawned bright and beautiful and all nature was gay with a wealth of flowers wish which to decorate the graves of our beloved dead.

There was a fine representation from each of the various lodges. The procession formed on Chicago street, headed by the band. Next came the Uniformed Rank K. of P., followed by the others in a body, carriages with the speakers of the day and one laden with flowers. Many potted plants were used.

Arriving at the cemetery they proceeded at once to place their flowers on the graves of their brothers and sisters, and then gathered around the speakers stand for the furthur ceremonies of the day.

The ladies quartette gave a very fine selection which was followed by the invocation by Rev. Weld, after which Rev. Hartzog gave an excellent address on the occasion that called these brothers and sisters together. Another selection by the quartette followed. Rev. Weld pronounced the benediction and the crowd dispersed for their several homes.

These memorial services are most touching and beautiful and serve to exemplify the bonds of fraternal love that bind these organizations together as one great family.

And the perfume of the flowers rises like incense to bless and cheer each one as they go about their several duties in the every day walks of life

The evils of riches are seldom manifest to those who possess them

REUNION

Mrs. Wm. Powell and her sister Mrs. Warner of Adrian and Mrs. Della Pentecost were among the many old schoolmates who met with Thomas Wellwood at her home just west of Clinton on Thursday of last week.

This was an annual event and was much enjoyed by all present. A fine dinner was served and the afternoon was spent in music and games. A busy peanut hunt resulted in Mrs. Willis Tripp securing 1st prize and Mrs. Della Pentecost 2nd. Everyone reported a fine time.

Yielded to Sister.

Mother had a bright red apple, which she wished to give to the children, at the same time teaching the little brother a lesson in generosity. Johnnie had a peculiar fondness for apples.

Calling him to her side she said: "Now, dear, mamma has a nice red apple to give you, and she wants you to be generous." That word was not in Johnnie's vocabulary, so he said: "Mamma, what do you mean by being generous?"

"Oh, dear, that means you are to divide the apple into two parts and give sister the larger."

Johnnie was silent. Suddenly his face brightened, as he handed the apple again to his mother, saying:

"Mamma, give it to sister and tell her to be generous."

Expert Advice.

"Doctor,' said the woman whose husband owed everybody in town, "John's in a very bad way. I've been trying to get him to come to see you, but he's so obstinate, you know, and so I've made up my mind to see you myself and ask whether you think you can do anything for him."

"What are his symptoms?"

"Oh, he's awfully nervous. He can't seem to settle down to anything."

"H'm! That's bad. That puts him in an awful predicament. When a man gets so that he can neither settle down nor settle up the only thing I can recommend is travel. Better take what things you can move conveniently and start on a long journey some time when nobody's looking. I won't let on."

Not Sure About It.

A sad-looking young man entered the chemist's shop and asked for a prescription for indigestion.

"Do you eat well-cooked food?" asked the chemist.

"Well, I can't say that," replied the customer. "Only yesterday my wife made a pudding in the kettle, and when it swelled she couldn't get it out, and she cut it up inside, and I had to suck it through the spout. Then she made a pancake on the gridiron, and it slipped through and put the fire out, and so I've come here for help."

Reconstructed.

"Has the man you married made a good husband?" asked the spinster.

"No," replied the woman with a square chin. "He merely furnished the material for a good husband. I did the making."

An Old Stand-by.

Little Willie—"Say, pa, what is a technicality?"

Pa—"A technicality, my son, is what lawyers quibble over when the evidence isn't satisfactory."

Constipation Cure Free

With the first signs of constipation you resort to the home methods of relief, such as hot or cold water on arising, lots of stewed fruit with your breakfast, etc., but what do you do when these fail?

The majority then start on salts and purgative waters, then change to cathartic pills, etc. If you have gone through these various stages you know they were all useless, so far as permanent results go. Now you should try just once again, but try something practical and sensible, a remedy made and intended for the purpose you are trying to accomplish. Such a remedy, as thousands can testify, is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, which is guaranteed to be permanent in its results. Its ingredients are such that by a brief use of it the stomach and bowel muscles are trained to again do their work normally, so that in the end you can do away with medicines of all kinds. That it will do this Mr. G. Y. Dodson of Sanville, Va., will gladly attest, and so will Mrs. S. A. Hampton of Portage, O.

To those who are still skeptical there is a way to prove these assertions without a penny of expense: Simply send your name and address to Dr. Caldwell and obtain a free sample bottle. After using it, if you are then convinced it is the remedy you need, buy a fifty cent or one dollar bottle of your druggist and continue to use it for a brief time until cured. The directions are simple and the dose is small. It is pleasant to the taste, does not gripe and is promptly effective, and these statements are guaranteed or money will be refunded.

This remedy is over a quarter of a century old and is personally taken by more druggists than any other similar remedy on the American market. Because of its effectiveness, purity and pleasant taste it is the ideal laxative remedy for children, women and old folks generally.

Dr. Caldwell personally will be pleased to give you any medical advice you may desire for yourself or family pertaining to the stomach, liver or bowels absolutely free of charge. Explain your case in a letter and he will reply to you in detail. For the free sample simply send your name and address on a postal card or otherwise. For either request the doctor's address is Dr. W. B. Caldwell, R.600 Caldwell building, Monticello, Ill.

FARM NOTES.

If there are other bees tha in the neighborhood so you feed them in the open, then o evenings turn back a corner packing that is over the fram and feed from a shallow dish. a saucer with a square of muslin, always remembering that bees will slip down on a wet, slippery surface and drown if precautions are not taken. That is what the square of muslin is for. Let it reach well over the dish on to the frames so the bees will have no trouble to get at it. Then fill the saucer with warm syrup and the bees will do the rest.

As soon as the young cockerels begin to show signs of growing a comb they must be disposed of if they are intended for market. If they grow a comb of any great size they will bring but 8 to 10 cents a pound instead of 18 or 20. It is a loss of food and a waste of time to feed them after they are four or five months of age. A great many people prefer a cockerel about five months of age to a broiler, for if prepared in the proper way they make an excellent dish.

Moist foamy soil, well drained and not very susceptible to drouth, affords the best seed bed for rhubarb. It should be exceedingly rich and the seed put in drills one inch deep. Cover with a hoe and press down well with the foot. A pound of rhubarb seed will usually produce about 1000 plants. It is a mistake to allow the plants to go to seed. If very large stalks are desired for a fancy trade all but the vigorous center buds should be thinned out.

Any community that will allow useful birds to be destroyed ought to be eaten alive with insects. And until the people will arouse and protect the birds, there is no use for them to complain about the loss from insect ravages.

The average farmer is not so much in need of advice as to how to grow more bushels an acre as he is to get more dollars, net, for the crop grown.

The man who will not take the pains to breed a good mare to a good horse must expect to put up with a poor colt as a result of his carelessness.

Prevent horses from being rained upon if possible when they are very hot.

The department of agriculture has received a report of experiments made in Germany with milch cows. During a period of 10 days in November, in which they were turned out of doors for three hours each day, a herd of 80 cows produced on the average per day 1461 pounds of milk and 58.8 pounds of butter, whereas, during the preceding 10 days, in which they were kept the entire day in the stall, the same cows produced on the average but 1349 pounds of milk per day and 50.6 pounds of butter. The general health and appetite of the cows were improved by the period out of doors each day.

Swiss chard is growing in popularity. It is cultivated like the beet and is ready for use as a sort of substitute for asparagus within a few weeks after seeding. It lacks the richness of flavor of asparagus but is a good substitute while the asparagus plantation is getting ready to bear. The long stalks are served as asparagus or as creamed celery, and the leaves may be cooked like spinach. Lucullus is the choicest variety.

Sea kale should be in every garden and would be a good money-maker for our commercial growers. Seed sown in the spring makes plants that will yield the next year and a patch handled like asparagus is good for many years to come. It actually pushes up the ground in slabs after the last freeze in spring. The bleached stalks are prepared and eaten like asparagus.

The first one or two litters of eggs laid by pullets are not so serviceable so sure or profitable for hatching as is their later product, for the reason that they were first formed at a time when the pullet was growing and the organs not fully developed.

Bad cases of feather eating have been cured by painting around the bare places on hens that have had their feathers plucked with a preparation made of powdered aloes dissolved in alcohol. Hens do not like the bitter taste.

Practical sheep men say three to four sheep an acre are enough. Yet, as already stated, this would depend on the season, character of the pasture, etc. Much in all these practical things must be left to the flock

Only a Short Trip.

Mrs. Meeker—"Oh, doctor, my husband seems to be wandering in his mind this morning."

Doctor—"Don't let that worry you; he can't go very far."

A Sermon in Brief.

"He's a good loser."

"But a poor provider."

"Well, you can't expect a wage-earner to be both."

KEEP THE KIDNEYS WELL

Health is Worth Saving, and Some Tecumseh People Know How to Save It

Many Tecumseh people take their lives in their hands by neglecting the kidneys when they know these organs need help. Sick kidneys are responsible for a vast amount of suffering and ill health, but there is no need to suffer nor to remain in danger when all diseases and aches and pains due to weak kidneys can be quickly and permanently cured by the use of Doan's Kidney Pills. Here is a Tecumseh citizen's recommendation.

William W. Shurtz, Kilbuck street, Tecumseh, Mich., says: "I have used Doan's Kidney Pills at different times for ten years and have received such good results that I gladly recommend them. Whenever I feel that my kidneys are not doing their work properly, I procure a box of Doan's Kidney Pills at C. A. Wright, & Son's drug store and through their use I am promptly relieved."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

Forget your prejudice for just one baking

Lay aside your favorite baking powder for just once. Forget for a day that it is "the kind mother used." Dispense with the idea that there is "nothing else just as good." It may have served you admirably for years. But just remember, other things have improved since grandmother's time. So why not baking powder?

Get from your grocer today a can of Calumet Baking Powder. Bake a batch of biscuits, a cake or your favorite pastry. If the baking does not come out just as good, or better, than usual. If it is not as light, sweet and delicious. If it does not prove up to your high standard in every respect, providing of course you have in every other way exercised your usual methods, take the can of Calumet back to the grocer and get your money. This is our first step in making friends for Calumet. The continued good results, the purity, the economy in both cost and use will hold them.

An Opinion Requested.

Gustave Eberlein, the famous German sculptor, said the other day in New York that in beauty of face and figure the American woman excelled all others—that the American type of beauty approached almost absolute perfection.

"In intelligence as well," the sculptor resumed, "the American woman excels. But now and then she has the defect of the intelligence—she is over-positive, she is overconfident. In that case I like to see her taken down.

"I once met a beautiful and brilliant American woman on shipboard She talked splendidly, but she was very positive—positive, indeed.

"'I am a good reader of faces,' she said one day at luncheon. 'On first sight of a person I form my opinion of that person's character; and I am never wrong. I am positively never wrong.'

"'Mother,' her little boy called shrilly from the other end of the long table, where he sat with his nurse.

"'Well, what is it, my son?' said the mother indulgently.

"And we all turned to hear what the little fellow had to say.

"'Mother,' he piped, 'I want to know what was your opinion, mother, when you first saw me."—Washington Star.

The Summer Minstrels.

"Mistah Banks," said the corpulent end man as he mopped his brow with a green handkerchief, "can yo' tell me why it am dat de Mexican revolutionists always slip away from dey pursuers?"

"No, Mistah Bones," replied the interlocutor in a solemn voice, "I cannot tell you why it is that the Mexican revolutionists slip away from their pursuers."

"Why, dat's easy. It's because dey am greasers. Ha, ha! Ladies and gentlemen, Mistah Basswood, the famous tenor, will now sing date pathetic ballad, 'De Sideboards Sherman Wore.'"

Slow Sale.

"How's your luck this season?" a commercial sociably inquired of a stranger whom he took to be also on the road

"Pretty fair. How's yours?"

"Oh, I'm down on it; haven't made a sale in two weeks."

"That oughtn't to discourage you. I consider I'm doing well if I make a sale once in two years."

The other stared at him incredulously. "Once in two years!" he echoed, cigar half way to his mouth. "Say, friend," slowly and solicitously, "what's your line?"

"Lighthouses," was the laconic reply.

BURN TOBACCO IN RAGE

Honduras Planters in Protest to Monopoly Destroy Product.

Bill in Honduras Congress Grants Promoter Entire Control of Business—Planters Against Measure.

New Orleans, June 20. — A demonstration against the government of a semi-revolutionary character is reported from San Pedro and other towns in the tobacco district of Honduras. A bill before the Honduras congress grants the promoter a monopoly of the tobacco business of the country, and it was reported the concessionaire proposed to sell the monopoly to the American Tobacco company. When the news reached the tobacco country that the monopoly had been granted, the tobacco planters broke out in loud denunciation of the government and bales upon bales of tobacco were burned in the streets of San Perdo and other Honduras towns.

Thousands of pounds had been thus destroyed when the news came that the tobacco bills had fallen through and congress had not passed the concession. The planters who had burned a part of their tobacco declared that they would burn the rest of their output rather than have it go into the hands of a government monopoly.

CHINESE GUNMEN IN STREET FIGHT

Deadly Feud Between Hip Sing Tong and Four Brothers.

TWO DYING FROM SHOT WOUNDS

Chinatown in New York Cut Off From City by Wall of Police—Eight Arrested With Guns in Hands During Street Fight.

New York, June 27.—Big Bill Hodgins, captain of police in Chinatown, stood in the doorway of Jimmy Naughton's livery stable in Mott street, just above the Church of the Transfiguration. He looked east along Pell street and yawned.

The big triangular flag of the Four Brothers was whipping from the roof of the Chinese Delmonico's at 24 Pell street. The Four Brothers society were getting ready for a banquet, a double celebration in honor of the ancient four who founded the clan of Chu Gain, a Four Brothers gun man, who was acquitted recently of the charge that he shot and killed Chung Fook, of the Leong Tong, on April 10. Pell street, therefore, was filling slowly with Four Brothersmen. There was nothing to indicate anything but an ordinary, sleepy afternoon in Chinatown.

A sudden noise like several packs of big fire crackers being set off all at once came from the corner they had just passed. Hodgins and Sergeant Magner, wheeling round, saw eight or ten Chinese shooting at each other from both sides of Pell street. Splintered window glass was tinkling on the pavements. Sightseers were scrambling for outlets, any way to get them out of the furious turmoil. Chinese were dodging and twisting through the crowd, screaming shrilly. Chinese mothers, no longer placid, were snatching their babies from the windows. Policemen were running from all directions, sounding their whistles.

In front of Sing Yen's candy booth, a Chinaman was lying on the sidewalk, throwing his head in agony from side to side and utterly squeaks of pain. It was Sing Yen, himself, a peaceable man, but caught between the gunmen of the Four Brothers and the On Leong Tong. A few feet away from Sing Yen lay Gin Sing of the Four Brothers, shot in the abdomen and bleeding dreadfully, while Chu Pan, also of the Four Brothers, sat with his back to the wall of the tenement with a bullet in his thigh.

The battle ended as suddenly as it began. Capt. Hodgins and Magner caught two of the fleeing Tong men and turned them over to patrolmen Precinct Detectives who had been on duty in Chinatown grabbed three more who were scuttling away. Within half an hour there were 100 bluecoats in Chinatown and Capt. Hodgins had closed the district to visitors. Chinatown was cut off from the rest of New York last night by a wall of policemen.

In the Hudson Street hospital Sin Yen and Gin Ching were dying from their wounds and Chu Pang was held there a prisoner. Eight Chinese were locked up in the Elizabeth street station, five of them caught with pistols in their hands or their pockets, three of them picked up as witnessed. The trouble was another flare up of the feud which started months ago between the Four Brothers and the On Leon Tong. Formerly the On Leongs had warred against the Hig Sing Tong for the gambling privileges of Chinatown, but the Four Brothers succeeded to the claims of the weakened Hip Sings

ROOSEVELT TO SEE PRESIDENT TAFT

Seeks to Dissuade Gov. Hughes Entering Supreme Court.

MEETING MOST IMPORTANT ONE

Col. Roosevelt Takes Position Gov. Hughes Is Needed to Save Party in New York State—To See Taft Wednesday Night.

Oyster Bay, N. Y., June 27.—When Col. Roosevelt forsakes the calm and quiet of Sagamore Hill on Tuesday for the gayety of the Harvard commencement at Cambridge, he will mark the beginning of what is likely to be a pretty important meeting. It is known here that the colonel has arranged a conference with President Taft at Beverly. This is certain.

Mr. Roosevelt will hold his interview with the president Wednesday night or possibly Thursday. He will go from Cambridge to Swamp Scott, Mass., whence he will be driven over to Beverly in the big touring car. It has been suggested by men who are close to the colonel that Senator Lodge and Congressman Nicholas Longworth would not surprise anybody if they dropped in along with the ex-president. And perchance Gov. Hughes.

Those who have discussed politics with Roosevelt know that he has not yet made up his mind in regard to the Taft administration. He hasn't endorsed or given any hint that he favors what the president is doing and he will not make a public announcement until he has the chance of feeling his way. The colonel is very busy at present attempting to get a line on how things stand, both locally and nationally. The wires to Sagamore Hill are getting hotter and the mail is increasing tremendously every day.

It is said that Mr. Roosevelt is going to try to get Mr Taft to exert his influence upon Gov. Hughes to give up the federal supreme court bench for a third term in the gubernatorial chair at Albany. The colonel is dead in earnest about Hughes saving the Republican party in New York state and the visit of Hughes to Sagamore Hill some time soon will be a mighty interesting one.

Diamond Is Found by Capt. George Berke and Returned, Receiving $100 from Labor Leader.

Atlantic City, N. J., June 27.—Engaged in a game of "bathing suit baseball" with President Samuel Gompers of the American Federation of Labor, and Frank Morrison, secretary of the powerful labor organization, and other leaders on the beach, John Mitchell, one of the executive council of the federation and former head of the Mine Workers' union, lost the $1,000 diamond ring presented to him by his admirers after settlement of the big Pennsylvania coal mine strike.

Capt. George Berke, a veteran life guard, found the ring and received a $100 bill from the labor leader. Mitchell arrived here with Gompers, Morrison, James Pritchett and other leaders of the federation to attend the annual executive council of the Building Trades and Metal Workers' departments, which will take place at the Hotel Windsor today.

SENATE TO PROBE BRIBERY CHARGES

House Also to Join in Investigation of Corruption.

TO AIR THE WHOLE SCANDAL

Efforts to Confine the Sifting Merely to the McMurray Contracts Is Squelched—Inquiry May Lead to Men in High Places.

Washington, June 27.—Congress in its closing hour ordered a full and thorough investigation of Senator Gore's charges of bribery and corruption in connection with legislation affecting the moneys and property of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians.

Independent resolutions for this purpose were adopted by the senate and house. Not a dissenting voice was raised. Some of the men alleged to be involved preferred that the investigations be confined merely to an inqury as to the validity of the contracts made with the Indians and whether or not the fees sought by the attorneys were reasonable.

But there was an insistent demand on the part of senators and members who have no connection with the scandal for the most sweeping investigation possible in order that they personsily may be cleared of any knowledge of the matter.

As a result no opposition was manifested in the senate to a resolution proposed by Senator Hughes of Colorado, and in the house a substitute was adopted for the inadequate resolution offered by Congressman Bird McGuire of Oklahoma.

Following the adoption of the resolution the vice president appointed the following men to conduct the investigation for the senate: Wesley L. Jones, of Washington, chairman; Theodore E. Burton, of Ohio; Coe I. Crawford, of South Dakota; Charles J. Hughes Jr., of Colorado; Leroy Percy, of Mississippi.

The speaker announced the house committee as follows: Charles H. Burke, of South Dakota, chairman; Philip Campbell, of Kansas; Clarence B. Miller, of Minnesota; John H. Stephens, of Texas; Edward W. Saunders, of Virginia.

Leaders showed little disposition to have investigated the charges that members of congress and two former senators were interested in the agreements as alleged by Senator Gore. The matter was so pregnant with serious possibilities for the Republican party, however, that after careful consideration the conclusion was reached that an investigation would have to be made.

Action was forced in part by the Democrats. Senator Hughes rose in the senate and offered a resolution directing an investigation specifically into the charges made by the Oklahoma senator. No obstacles were placed in the way of its adoption and it was passed unanimously.

The house action followed a demand and personal explanation made by Congressman Bird McGuire. A resolution was adopted authorizing the speaker to appoint a committee of five to make a sweeping investigation to determine whether, in connection with the McMurray or any other contracts with the Indians of the five civilized tribes, including the Chickasaws and Choctaws, "bribery, corruption, fraud, or undue influence" was used to secure their validation.

The committee was authorized under the terms of the resolution to visit Oklahoma, to summon witnesses, to compel testimony, and to prosecute for perjury.

A GLASS EYE.

It Turned the Scale In a Matter of Love.

By THOMAS R. DEANE.

[Copyright, 1905, by American Press Association.]

I courted Jeannette abroad. There is no better field for lovemaking than traveling about with nothing to do but enjoy oneself, or, rather, oneselves, for as "it takes two to make a bargain," so it takes two to make love. Jeannette and I met at Sorrento, where we sat in a pavilion in the midst of an orange grove looking on the bay of Naples spread out several hundred feet below us. Spoony young men are always talking to spoony women about fickleness, and I found a convenient illustration in the ever changing hues of the Mediterranean. Besides, there is something in the Italian climate to quicken love. It is soft and balmy, yet the skies are bright and blue.

Then in Rome we dawdled through the Forum and sat on the stone seats in the Coliseum just as youths and maidens did some eighteen centuries before, except that the Roman couples of those days were there to see gladiators kill one another or wild beasts feed on lean Christians. But we were under the blue sky of Italy, and, as I have said, the Italian climate quickens love.

From Rome we drifted into Florence and stood at evening looking over the stone coping of the Ponte Vecchio at the placid Arno flowing beneath us while the last rays of the setting sun gilded the neighboring hills. And—as I think I have remarked before—the Italian climate is conducive to love.

But I didn't say that about the English climate. The English climate is conducive to—let me see—the English climate is conducive to colds, sore throat, rheumatism, the blues. I wonder that the English people ever marry for love, and I fancy there is less marrying there on that account than in any land on the face of the earth.

It may seem that this is not only disagreeable, but a digression. It may be the former, but it is not the latter. At any rate, it is a part of my story, for

MY GAZE WAS FASTENED ON HIS GLASS EYE.

Jeannette and I parted in Florence, having plighted our troth on the elevated Piazza Michelangelo overlooking the city. We were sitting beneath one of half a dozen statues of David, each being the original statue, and came together again in England.

What a change, not only in the climate, but in us—I mean in Jeanette! In Italy she had been responsive to my slightest whisper. Indeed, the slighter the whisper the better it accorded with our mellifluent surroundings. In England I, being hoarse, was obliged to speak to her with the voice of a megaphone, and she, being deafened by a cold, could scarcely hear me. Instead of leaning her head against my arm and looking up at me with a happy smile, as she had done in the Italian moonlight, speaking of poets and painters, she sat regarding me with watery eyes, saying that she wished it would stop raining.

This story goes to prove that what writers on the development of civilization say about the effect of climate on peoples is true. In Italy Jeannette and I had loved; in England the marriage question became one of practical advantage. I found that I was not as much in love as I had thought I was until Jeannette indicated that she was meditating giving me the grand bounce. This brought me to my senses.

Young Lord Crickenback, who never appeared without a very large flower in his buttonhole, a very small silk hat on his head and a monocle on his right eye, was the man who taught me that, despite my present watery surroundings, I did not wish to surrender Jeannette. Why had I not continued to keep her in Italy, or why did I not insist on the knot being tied before coming to this land, where there is no sentiment, only interest? This Lord Crickenback had nothing whatever to recommend him except that he had a title. Even with his title on the sunny shores of the Mediterranean I could have snapped my fingers at him.

Jeannette did not break with me. I think she would have done so had not the sun occasionally broken through the clouds to remind her of those happy days she had passed with me at Sorrento, at Florence and at Rome. On such days I noticed a sudden demonstration of a dormant love for me that had not entirely died within her. I wished on such sunny days that there were some places where one could go similar to the Piazza Michelangelo at Florence or the Corso in Rome. But there are no such places in London. The most enjoyable is Hyde park, but the sun doesn't shine long enough to dry the benches. And a wet bench is no place for spooning. One bright day I took her to the Tower, and we sat together in the courtyard of the old pile. I was about to whisper something tender in her ear when she shuddered.

"What is it?" I asked concernedly.

"That plate in the ground. It says that on this spot Lady Jane Grey, Catherine Howard and others were executed."

We arose and walked away.

Crickenback continued to hang about Jeannette, and I saw that with her it was a case of interest versus love. I wished that I might find some method of turning the scale in my favor. I have usually been considered to have about me something of that resource for which we Americans are distinguished, but who ever heard of a man in love—really in love, I mean—being able to think dispassionately about anything concerning the winning or the losing of the girl he loves.

I met Wackford in London. He had just come over. Wackford and I have been bosom friends since we were little kids. A man in love needs some one to talk to, and I talked to Wackford. I told him the whole story. He listened to me attentively, sympathetically.

"What you want," he said when I had finished, "is some device by which you can save the young lady from herself—and for yourself, understand?"

"That's it exactly."

"Very well. You show me this Crookedback, or whatever his name is, and I'll see what I can do for you."

The very next afternoon I drove with Wackford in Rotten row, and we saw Crickenback. You can meet anybody that belongs to the upper classes in Rotten row.

"Why, the fellow wears a glass eye!" said Wackford.

"How do you know?"

"Can't I tell the difference between a glass and a real eye? Of course I can. There—see the sun shining on it! Do you suppose he has told her about it?"

"Don't know. I never heard her speak of it."

The next time I was with Jeannette I asked her, "Did Lord Crickenback ever speak of any misfortune, any mutilation?"

"No. Why do you ask?"

"Oh, nothing; at least nothing that it's my business to tell you."

"I insist upon knowing."

I demurred for awhile, then told her what Wackford had said about his lordship's glass eye.

"I don't believe it," she said.

"You'd better ask him." I replied.

"Ask him? Do you suppose I would do that?"

Every time I saw Crickenback after that my gaze was fastened willy nilly on his glass eye. I wondered if it had the same effect on Jeannette. I asked Wackford when he was going to give me the device he had referred to, and he replied:

"Don't know. Did you tell her about his glass eye?"

I admitted that I had, and Wackford turned the subject.

Whatever was the cause, Lord Crickenback from this time seemed to be losing ground with Jeannette. As he lost I gained. Then I perked up and played indifferent. This was followed by a coldness between Jeannette and me in which she seemed saddened, and eventually came a reconciliation. I determined to strike while the iron was hot and made it a condition of my forgiveness for her defection from me to Crickenback that we should be married at once.

We were married in London, Wackford being my best man. I insisted on a wedding trip to Italy, but since it was not now the season for visiting the far south we contented ourselves with Lake Como. While out in a boat one evening, pulled by an Italian oarsman who could not understand English, I asked my wife to make a clean breast of her part of the coming of Lord Crickenback between us.

"I was not in love with him," she said, "but a title to a woman is very tempting. I thought how nice it would be to be called Lady Crickenback and to be introduced to the real English nobility."

"And why didn't you do it?" I asked.

"Because I loved you, of course."

"How did you happen to come to a decision that you would rather have be and love than a title and no love?"

"You insist in knowing?"

"Yes, I do."

"Well, it was the glass eye."

"You don't mean it!"

"Yes. For my life whenever I saw him after you told me he had a glass eye I couldn't keep from looking at it whenever he was with me. At last it grew so repulsive that I had to send him away."

When he returned to London Wackford called on us.

"By the bye, Wack," I said, "by giving me the fact of Crickenback's wearing a glass eye you fixed me up with Jeannette."

"He has two now."

"What do you mean by that? Is he stone blind?"

"No; he has left off his monocle and has taken on a pair."

I looked at Jeannette, and Jeannette looked at me; then we smiled.

"You wanted me to suggest something," said Wackford, "to break the Crickenback spell, and I gave you the glass eye, which is synonymous with eyeglass. You owe me one."

CLOSING THE HOUSE.

Hints as to How This Important Duty Should be Done.

Cover the carpets with dust sheets or newspapers.

Take down the curtains and put them away; remove chair covers and fold them.

Take down pictures and lay them carefully on sofas or beds.

Put china in cupboards or drawers, and when this is not possible cover them over with a light dust sheet or newspaper.

Cover up every piece of furniture in dust sheets or newspapers.

To avoid any risk of damage from damp take care that nothing is left near windows or fireplaces, and that the furniture is packed in the center of each room.

Carefully close and fasten all windows except in rooms where there is a geyser or gas stove.

Take special notice of skylights, and leave nothing where any wet can penetrate.

Wrap up steel fenders and fire irons, and do not leave them near the fireplaces.

If afraid of moth, shake and fold blankets and woolen goods, sprinkle the edges with pepper, and put lumps of napthaline between them.

Should there be any place where the rain comes in, leave cloths, or wedge with old rage.

Empty the lamps and oil stoves, and if the house is damp, grease with mutton fat any metal article which might be liable to rust.

Lastly, pull down blinds and fasten the shutters and leave the house under the charge of the police, asking them to give it particular notice.

All valuables, such as silver, should be sent to the bank.

Why She Hurried.

"Oh!" snapped the girl with gray eyes who was hastily trying to but gloves, "I might have known that it would be out of the question for anything to go right today!"

She got down on her knees to search under the chiffonier for the button which had come off. When she struggled to her feet her hat was over one ear and her veil was crooked and she had not found the button.

The girl turned pale. "I wish this day was over!" she sobbed. "Everything goes wrong! I'll miss that train and be late for dinner and Jack hates to wait. Oh, dear! How I loathe black gloves with a brown suit, but I'll have to wear black gloves now!"

The front door shut on a fold of her skirt and the resultant tug at her belt loosened the fastening, so that she had to go back aond repair the damage to her appearance.

When she emeregd again she began to run toward the suburban station, four blocks away. She heard the roar of the oncoming train. As she slammed her dime before the ticket window the train was at a stand. She staggered up the stairs just intime to get a good view of the last car platform as it pulled away.

"Well," she said violently, "Well!"

For a minute she walked the deserted platform. Then she went inside the stuffy waiting room.

It would be useless to try to explain to Jack when he met her on the arrival of the next train in the city, why he had been kept waiting a half hour thinking things about the unreliability and unpunctuality of women! And the pleasant little dinner which might have meant so much would be spoiled—just spoiled by her annoyance and her nervousenss. When one had to hurry so and things went wrong one never looked one's best.

At this point the girl she hated worse than any other walked into the waiting room and headed straight for her, so she was obliged to sit and talk to that awful girl the rest of the time!

When the train came at last and she stepped in she remembered with a pang that her new gold-mesh handbag she had inteneded to carry was reposing in its case at home.

Half way to the city something happened and the train stopped for five minutes, which seemed hours to her.

Getting out of the train a big man trod on her toes and she also remembered she had forgotten her handkerchief with the real lace edge.

When she reached the place where Jack was to meet her she was tired to death and ready to go back home and cry herself to sleep. She looked horrid, she knew, and she loathed all dinners and theaters.

As she hastily glanced around and it dawned on her that Jack was not standing there with anxiety and annoyance on his face, she realized that the worst had happened. He had got tired of waiting, had concluded she had broken their evening's engagement, and so had gone away!

Just then a red-faced, anxious young man tore madly through the crowd and made for her corner.

"I'm so sorry!" he gasped. "And you've been waiting all this time! I've nearly broken my neck trying, but I simply could not get here a minute earlier. I don't know how to excuse myself—"

"Oh," breathed the young woman with noble generosity, the world suddenly righting itself and her toilet as sudenly settling into perfection and beauty, "Oh, that's all right, Jack! I understand perfectly! You don't need to feel bad about it at all."—Frank H. Sweet.

Auto Language.

"Daughter, who was that young nuisance honking in front of the house last night?"

"It was Montmorency, father. Sixteen honks means 'I love you.'"

Those Foolish Questions.

"Hello, old man. Back from the seashore?"

"Not at all, old chap. I'm still there."

Is Yo'?

Uncle Zebediah had inherited a large crop of nephews, whom he had endeavored to bring up the way they should go, often finding it very difficult to make ends meet, when, to his intense disgust he learned that one of them had taken unto himself a wife without the knowledge or consent of the old man.

"Mose, I'se done been tol' yo's married," he reproached his kinsman, meeting him on the street. "Is you?"

"I'se not sayin' I aint," replied Moses evasively.

"I didn't ask yo' is yo' ain't, I asked yo' ain't yo' is. Is yo'?"—Brooklyn Life.

FROM WASHINGTON.

(From our regular correspondent.)

Congress at Washington is expediting work with a view to an early adjournment, which it is thought by some will take place on Saturday, the 25th inst., but which others think will not occur much before July 2 or 3. After three months of uncertainty as to its fate the bill admitting the territories of Arizona and New Mexico to statehood was taken up by the Senate on Thursday and passed, after a brief debate of not more than two hours, and thus two more large territories are added to what is called the "Sisterhood of States." All the speeches were favorabe to the creation of the two states, but the Democrats of the Senate favored the House bill. As passed the bill provides for the admission as states of the two territories after a constitution has been adopted by each of them, which constitution must be approved by the President and ratified by Congress. There will be wild rejoicing in Arizona and New Mexico, for onty a few days ago hope of achieving statehood during the present session of Congress had been given up.

* * *

After the adjournment of Congress there will be prompt departure from Washington of the members of the Cabinet and other prominent officers of the civil, military and naval services of the government. The Secretary of War left Washington last night for a trip around the world. He will visit the Philippines, Russia, Siberia, China and Europe, sailing on June 28 by the Pacific Mail Steamship Line. He is accompanied by his wife and son. Brigadier General Edwards, who has charge of the Bureau of Insular Affairs, with Mrs. Edwards and their daughter will accompany the War Secretary. Gen. Edwards has often made the trip, on two occasions accompanying President Taft, who was at that time Secretary of War. The President and Mrs. Taft will go to their New England home. The ambassadors and other representatives of foreign countries will dirperse to the seashore and mountain resorts and the capital will see them no more until the middle of September or first of October. Many Washingtonians have left the city to be present at the festivities incident on the return of ex-President Roosevelt after his fifteen months' absence.

THAT PLAYGROUND

Adrian has taken the matter of a playground for the young folks in good earnest and has gone so far as to appoint the Board of Education to take the matter in charge.

One man, feeling the need of such a place, has bought a vacant lot for his grandson, and others would do so if they could afford it.

Various sums have been suggested and now that the idea is in motion, they will undoubtedly succeed. Hurry up, Tecumseh!

ALFALFA CULTURE.

Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station at Wooster, in circular No. 91, says that alfalfa is being grown with more or less success in every county in that state; with greater success upon the rich and well drained limestone soils of the western half, than upon the shale clay and sandy loams of eastern Ohio, although under these much less favorable natural conditions success has been attained by many.

There are a unmber of conditions which are fatal to alfalfa. Among these, lack of drainage stands well to the front. Soils not having natural sub-surface drainage, i. e., a porous subsoil, should be tiled. While good surface drainage is helpful, trouble may be expected with a heavy, retentive subsoil, unless tile drainage is resorted to. Alfalfa will not thrive where the water level is permanently within three feet or less of the surface. It will stand flood water for a considerable time during the dormant season, unless the water freezes solid, but during the growing season two or more days' flooding is usually disastrous.

No farm crop seems as sensitive to soil acidity as alfalfa. There is no use to seed alfalfa in Ohio where red clover fails to do well and sorrel is working in in its place. Uplands usually become acid before bottom lands. As a general rule the first thing to do with all lands other than limestone, which have been in cultivation very many years, is to apply lime in some form. Not infrequently limestone soils which have been in cultivation for many years have had the lime pretty well leached out of the surface soil and will give better results if limed.

When in doubt as to whether lime is needed it is well to put out a small plot just to determine the needs of the soil.

It should be remembered that alfalfa is no ordinary crop. That if successful it will last four or five years and perhaps longer. Accordingly mistakes made with this crop mean more than with our common annuals. As stated above, one should make his plans for alfalfa from one to three years in advance, filling the soil with organic matter and plant food and cleaning it of weeds. It is not possible to plow and prepare a good seed bed for alfalfa in a week's time, as is frequently done for other crops. Time is an important factor in preparing a seed bed for alfalfa, and enough time should be taken to accomplish the desired result, viz., a firm, fine, moist and clean seed bed.

Betwixt and Between.

Miss Uppson—"Have you met the Neurox girls?"

Miss DeSwell—"No. What is their position in society?"

Miss Uppson—"It's sort of betwixt and between. They aren't exactly nobody, and yet they aren't really anybody."

This Is Awful.

"It's queer that women are so fond of tea," remarked the cheerful idiot.

"Why is it queer?" asked the typewriter boarder.

"Because," exclaimed the c. i., "it is the beginning of trials troubles and tribulations."

During the final examination before the dental board at the U. of M. Henry Marks of Port Huron but who came from Chicago for the examinations, was stricken with small pox and is in the detention hospital. About 90 others were to have taken the examinations and all but one have been vaccinated by the health officers. It is found out that there are 192 cases through the State and failure to report is blamed for its spread.

BREIF AND BREEZY

The Chicago Record-Herald has called, in a loud and ominous tone of voice for Mr. Lorimer's resignation. The Senator, it is feared, is extremely hard of hearing with respect to that, however.

Mr. Walter Wellman has relieved our anxiety greatly. He carefully explains that Mr. Roosevelt surely will mix in politics when he returns, unless he does nothing of the kind.

"Nat" Goodwin probably will find it hard to get any more advertising out of the matrimonial game, unless he should marry airy, fairy Lillian Russell.

It is now being figured in Washington that if Congress quits work now and does nothing more it will be possible to adjourn the first of July.

Fingy Connors has "said farewell to the New York Democracy". If the democracy is wise, it will quarantine rigidly against "Fingy's" return.

A summery effect that is decidedly pleasing pervades the July number of The Ladies World, just received. The fiction, of which there seems even more than usual, is bright and entertaning and the departments are filled seasonable matter that will save time, thought and labor to every housewife. The opening story is one of school life by Kate Milner Rabb. It is called Miss Fidelia's Tune and Time, and is the romance of the pretty school teacher, although the little blind god plays his usual pranks before happiness comes. The Disciplining of Lover Girl, by Clarice Vallette, tells in a delightful way of the attempt of a maiden aunt to bring up her infant niece by rule. There is also the second installment of a charming three part novelette, A Garden Enchanted; The Fall and the Rebuilding. Among the special articles Conservation and the Housewife is worthy of special mention, for it shows in an easily understood way what the continued destruction of the forests means.—(New York 50 cents a year.)

ANTHONY DEAL ABOUT CONCLUDED

SPECIAL MEETING HELD SATURDAY, JUNE 25

At a stockholders' special meeting held at the factory offices of the Anthony Company on Saturday, the 25th inst., every share of stock in the big institution was represented either in person or by proxy. This in itself is remarkable, but more remarkable still is the fact that every share of that stock confirmed the actions of the Board in negotiating the sale of the property. Not a single dissenting vote was cast, something almost unheard of in a transaction of magnitude and a distinct compliment to the relations existing between officers and stockholders.

Accountants are beginning to arrive from the offices of the new company to verify inventories and other important data, but the actual transfer will not take place until July 1.

One of the subjects of local discussion, ever since this deal was announced, has been—"Will the new company remain in Tecumseh?" Even though the Herald, from the most reliable sources of information, had confirmed the fact that the new owners would not only remain but would probably greatly increase the capacity of the plant, there has been a note of suspicion sounded on the streets. We are now glad to be able to say that as a further indication of their intentions, the new company has authorized the immediate purchase of two additional acres of land adjoining the present large tract.

And right here we want to say that it seems to us that our otherwise progressive village could vastly improve its method of greeting a new business ally.

When the Anthony Company was formed a great many said it would never be able to compete with the older concerns. When it had conquered all mechanical obstacles and required ample capital, the same old crowd said it couldn't be raised in Tecumseh. But it was. And now that Tecumseh has secured a branch of the biggest commercial institution in the world, there are those who say "It won't stay."

The best method to employ if one wishes to have his guest leave on an early train is to NOT make that guest thoroughly welcome, and to be suspicious of his intentions. Tecumseh has an important guest within her gates, we hope "The Biggest Little Town," will make her "Biggest Little Bow" to the "Biggest Corporation on Earth," and may they live happily ever after.

AWFUL ACCIDENT

SAD DROWNING OF REV. C. S. TUBBS OF CLINLON

Y. M. C. A. Camp Saddened by Terrible Catastrophe.

On the afternoon of Friday, June 24, a boat load of five from the camp went across the lake to bathe, E. T. May, Rev. C. S. Tubbs, Herbert Henderson, George Townsend and F. W. Stevenson being the occupants.

They had indulged in quite a frolic and were feeling quite lively as they came back to camp. Seeing a couple of young men treading water, and thinking them walking on the bottom of the lake, they all leaped into the water with the exception of Mr. May. Herbert Henderson, who could not swim, clung to the boat when he realized that they were in deep water, but Mr. Tubbs went to the bottom with the first leap, and rose to the surface struggling for breath. George Townsend of Clayton and F. W. Stevenson of Addison tried to rescue him and Alvin Stoddard of North Rome, one of the young men in the water at the time, clung to him and went down with him the last time, only saving himself by an effort.

The lake was dragged with barbed wire without success. Three men came over from Devil's Lake with a light and hook, and finally raised his body at the third effort. He was in the water about five hours.

Dr. Hartzog sent a telegram to W. S. Kimball of Clinton and C. H. Halliday, Dr. Davis and J. D. Hause went at once in E. A. Clark's automobile. John Schweid was the chauffeur and took them over to the lake in a very short time. Dr. Davis and J. D. Hause remained over night. Saturday morning James Hause went up with the ambulance and the auto went to bring back those who remained.

A great gloom was cast over Clinton when the news reached there, for Mr. Tubbs had endeared himself to all. especially among the young men and boys. He leaves a wife and two little ones to mourn his untimely death, besides a host of relatives and and friends.

The funeral was held from the Congregational church, Clinton, at 2 o'clock Monday afternoon.

CLASS REUNION

For more than 20 years it has been the practice of the class taught by Mrs. Helen M. Griswold to hold a reunion on her birthday and young and old have gathered together from far and near.

A few years ago death claimed our much loved teacher and we wondered what the future had in store for us. Mrs. Lemar Barnes took us under her motherly care and we have met from Sabbath to Sabbath listening to her teachings. By a strange coincidence her birthday was on the same date as that of Mrs. Griswold, and June 24th is held especially dear on that account.

Owing to circumstances this year the class met June 23 instead of 24 for their annual picnic. The meeting was at the home of Mrs. Christian Coller Saturday afternoon. The hours passed pleasantly in social conversasion and merry laughter. Mrs. Waldron had the 1st picture ever taken of the class, 19 in number, four of whom with their teacher, have passed over to the other side. A picture was taken Saturday which will be cherished in the years to come as this one has been.

A bountiful supper was served and when the sun sank low behind the western hills the oompany dispersed, pleased with their meeting and looking forward to another year's reunion.

INDIGESTION

Relief in Five Minutes and Permanent Cure or Money Back.

When C. A. Wright & Son state that they have a remedy that is guaranteed to cure any man or woman who suffers from food fermentation which causes belching, sour stomach, gas eructations, heartburn and that lump of lead feeling in the abdomen or money back what are the poor stomach sufferers in Tecumseh and vicinity going to do about it?

The name of the most remarkable stomach prescription is Mi-o-na. Most people call them Mi-o-na stomach tablets because they know that there is no remedy so good for indigestion or stomach disorders. Here is one opinion:

"I have been troubled with indigestion for more than a year. I bought one box of Mi-o-na and it cured me. Now I would not be without a box in the house for $50.00. It saves a lot of doctor bills when you can be cured for 50 cents.

You can use my name if you want to."—Arthur Sederquest, 6 Nichols St., Wakefield, Mass. Nov. 7, 1909.

Mi-o-na stomach tablets cost 50 cents a box at druggists everywhere and at C. A. Wright & Son's, Tecumseh.

Says Millions Are Stolen From Public Each Year.

CHEAP SUBSTITUTES HARMFUL

According to Dr Harvey W. Wiley, not 15 per cent of the coffee sold in the United States is of the quality guaranteed. Millions each year, says the doctor, are being stolen from the American people by the adulterators and misbranders who are selling their fraudulent products in the guise of the genuine article.

"One of the chief coffee frauds is in the classification of coffee," says Dr. Wiley. "Nearly all coffee in the United States is sold as either Mocha or Java, while, as a matter of fact, fully 85 per cent of all American coffee imports are from Brazil. There is very little real Mocha or Java brought here now, for the Brazilian coffee has driven it from the market not only because of quality, but because it lies closer to hand. The American people are using a billion pounds of coffee a year at present, and the majority of it is the long berry Santos, which seems to have the demand behind it.

Ground Coffee at Fault.

"The great trouble with the coffee business is the deceit practiced in the preparation of so called ground coffee. The makers of these blends are in many instances grossly deceiving the public, for they are using the very cheapest grades of coffee berry—something they can purchase for from 3 to 4 cents per pound—and this, in addition to the husks, scrapings, dustings and broken bits, is ground up together and placed in cans with a fancy label and sold at from 35 to 40 cents a pound as a highly superior special brand with a lot more buncombe of the same sort. The facts of the case are just as I have said, and the curious feature of the illicit traffic is that first class Brazilian coffee is so cheap that it is a wonder that any one could find it worth while to adulterate it at all.

"In Europe there are some 1,600 factories that are turning out hundreds of millions of pounds of imitation coffee made from pits of olives, pulverized shells of nuts and some cereal husks all mixed together with molasses as a binder, pressed into molds and roasted. The resultant bean is sold as coffee. Since the enactment of the pure food law in this country there are not, I believe, any factories of that sort, but we have to exercise constant vigilance to keep those European frauds out. As a matter of fact, no one is really safe in buying ground or roasted coffee, for, while it is not permitted to import broken beans or siftings, somehow they do get into bags and—and they are not thrown away.

Coffee Absolutely Harmless.

"As to the statement so frequently and speciously made that coffee is injurious, that is largely exaggeration. Coffee taken to excess will do harm. So will milk or any other substance. There are veritable coffee and tea drunkards, and because these suffer from the abuse of nutritious foods must we class these foods as pernicious and dangerous? The business of trying to sell a cereal mixture by picturing the awful effects supposed to follow the use of coffee is all tommyrot. No one who knows anything of food values would want to stuff in the first place, and I personally have no patience with the charlatans who are disposing of cereal mixture at 8 or 9 cents a pound as a substitute for coffee. It is nothing less than a plain lie to claim that it is a substitute, for it positively has none of the essential principles of coffee, and to say it has on the label is plain misbranding. It is claimed that for 1 cent two cups of excellent genuine coffee can be made from the Brazilian berry, and this, being so, would seem to make the cereal imitation very dear indeed."

GOVERNMENT AID TO TRUSTS.

How the Conservation of Coal Lands Is Playing Into the Hands of the Coal Barons.

Any inquiry into the increased cost of living may not improbably disclose something akin to a government trust running along with the private trusts to corner the necessities of life, says a writer in the Alaska-Yukon Magazine. It is beginning to appear that as fast as the government unnecessarily ties up, corners and sequesters certain classes of natural resources it increases the monopoly of similar resources and thereby tends to increase the cost to the consumer of every pound of nails, every pound of coal and every foot of lumber.

The theory of the geological survey in the withdrawing of coal lands is that by so doing more of the coal in the mines now being worked will be saved. And yet the estimates of this same geological survey show that coal measures in the United States contain coal enough to last the 90,000,000 of this country for 3,722 years without drawing upon the fabulously rich coal deposits of Alaska. The geological survey has recently reported that during the past year 7,675,000 acres of coal lands were withdrawn, and the form of withdrawal affecting 9,000,000 additional acres was altered in a manner to increase the sale price over 600 per cent. On 3,436,000 acres of coal land the government sale price is now $191,490,000, which last year could have been purchased at $62,477,000. No one accuses the wicked "coal barons" of having a hand in this, nor is it known that they are smiling behind their hands, but when we are berating them for coal famines and the high price of coal few stop to think of the price that the people are paying for thus conserving these coal lands.

Sample Helps Frail Women

So many women are dragging out weary lives just because their digestive organs are weak. The result is poor circulation, nervousness and the verge of invalidism. It is often very unnecessary and the woman's own fault.

The first thing to do is to look to the welfare of your bowels. There the trouble usually lies. All physicians know that a large percentage of women are habitually constipated, and from this results indigestion, piles, weariness, etc. that women constantly complain of. But there is no use taking "female remedies" and things of that kind until you have started your bowels to moving. You will find that when the bowels move regularly once or twice a day all your petty ills will disappear. Take a good, mild laxative tonic like Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin for awhile and you will find yourself rapidly getting better and stronger, your bowels will regulate themselves and work at stated times, and then your headaches and dizziness will disappear. Don't take strong cathartic pills or salts, but just such a mild and pleasant-tasting remedy as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin.

You can obtain a bottle of your druggist for fifty cents or one dollar, and either size may be enough to permanently cure you. Thousands of women keep it regularly in the house and will no longer be without it, as it cured them and can be used with safety by every member of the family, down to the youngest child, but if you have never used it take the advice of Mrs. Earl B. Cox, 409 Twenty-fifth street, Moline, Ill., and Mrs. Ellen Dungan, Muncie, Ind., and send to Dr. Caldwell for a free trial bottle, as they did, and learn for yourself what it will do in your own case. That it will cure you, as it did them, there is no doubt.

Dr. Caldwell personally will be pleased to give you any medical advice you may desire for yourself or family pertaining to the stomach, liver or bowels absolutely free of charge. Explain your case in a letter and he will reply to you in detail. For the free sample simply send your name and address on a postal card or otherwise. For either request the doctor's address is Dr. W. B. Caldwell, R.500 Caldwell building, Monticello, Ill.

KEEP THE KIDNEYS WELL

Health is Worth Saving, and Some Tecumseh People Know How to Save It

Many Tecumseh people take their lives in their hands by neglecting the kidneys when they know these organs need help. Sick kidneys are responsible for a vast amount of suffering and ill health, but there is no need to suffer nor to remain in danger when all diseases and aches and pains due to weak kidneys can be quickly and permanently cured by the use of Doan's Kidney Pills. Here is a Tecumseh citizen's recommendation.

William W. Shurtz, Kilbuck street, Tecumseh, Mich., says: "I have used Doan's Kidney Pills at different times for ten years and have received such good results that I gladly recommend them. Whenever I feel that my kidneys are not doing their work properly, I procure a box of Doan's Kidney Pills at C. A. Wright & Son's drug store and through their use I am promptly relieved."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

If you find any substance in your baking injurious to health made from baking powder in this can there is—

$1000 In it for you

The makers of certain Baking Powders have recently been shouting, "purity, purity, purity!!" All other manufacturers have been openly accused of offering an impure product. Calumet, as the largest competitor, has of course come in for its share. But we simply smiled—as our business grew.

For Calumet has been backed for years by an offer of $1,000 for any substance injurious to health found in the baking prepared with it. This offer has never been challenged.

Don't you think that if there was the least trace of impurity in Calumet that our competitors would be the first to jump at this offer? Wouldn't this be an ideal way of putting our product off the market entirely.

Does not this and the fact that it complies with all pure food laws, both State and National, prove that Calumet is absolutely pure?

With the purity question settled—then Calumet is undoubtedly the best Baking Powder. It contains more leavening power; it is more uniform—every can is the same. It assures better results—and it is moderate in price.

A FRESH CALAMITY.

As though we had not already enough worriment, dodging automobiles and taking orders from the cook, we are now told that a hundred and fifty years hence there will be no more children. Viewed from either pole of the situation, this is indeed a woeful prophecy. If you are a lover of children, it makes your blood run cold to realize that they are so soon to be added to the schedule of extinct animals, along with the dodo and the sabre-toothed tiger; while if you belong to the opposite class, it is equally distressing to know that this promised millennium is so far remote that you will not be here to enjoy the day when Angora cats and bull pups shall hold undisputed place as household pets.

However, 'tis useless to bewail the oracle of statistics. A learned college professor has computed the rate at which human births are declining, and when he announces that they will come to an end during the next century and a half we have no alternative but to accept his dictum. It is not a guess; it is a mathematical certainty. To be sure, he might have kept this dismal prediction to himself, but 'tis one of the moral duties of a statistician to temper the present joys of life with melancholy auguries. The horrors of the future are calculated with the same precision as eclipses of the moon. Every twelfth marriage results in a divorce; and yours may be the twelfth. Once a week, with clock-like regularity, some one is murdered in New York, and every 10 hours somebody is attacked, and every 48 minutes a building catches fire, every seven minutes there is a funeral, and every three minutes somebody is arrested; so that if you can remain in New York for a month without getting into trouble you are to be congratulated. But even in your own village home you are not out of danger. Every two minutes somebody in the United States is killed by tuberculosis; and if that fails to daunt you, then you must know that every minute of the day four and a half persons are tagged by the undertaker; and if you are not one of the four you may be the half.

No prophet who conjures with statistics has ever yet predicted anything pleasant. 'Tis just as well, perhaps, that this is so; for, as Father Gregory once remarked, "Peradventure this world here is made troublesome unto us, lest we be delighted by the way and forget whither we are going." At all events, we may not plan ahead for a picnic without remembering that the day is coming when there will be no water on the earth, and our Yule-tide levity is checked by the knowledge that a hundred years from now there will be no more Christmas trees; also, no more coal. Indeed, whichever way we turn, the future is black with calamity. There will be no more lumber, no more fuel, no more teeth, and now, latest on the list, no more children. And if our descendants manage to survive these subtractions it will be merely to look forward to the time when a slowly cooling sun will put the ice-man and all his cousins out of business.—Lippincott's.

Effects of Civic Betterment Work.

Discussing the general movement for civic improvement as conducted by the American Civic Association and affiliated organizations, the Public Library Quarterly, published by the Kansas City Free Library by authority of the board of education, contained an editorial recently from the pen of Carrie Westlake Whitney, editor.

She wrote, in part:

"In municipal or civic betterment, not alone the comforts and pleasures of the people are considered, but the ethical side is developed by beautiful surroundings and refining influences. This awakening indicates that selfishness and sordidness are to be eradicated from the American soil and that every citizen will imbibe the noble sentiment of helpfulness and cultivate it for the general welfare of all.

"The problem of city improvement is the most pressing question of the day and the new conditions are studied with great attention. Cities are vieing with each other in ornamenting, in lighting and in making pleasing and commodious accommodations for the people. Slums, or poor tenement districts, are no longer permitted; parks, playgrounds, public baths are now necessary furnishings for well-organized cities.

"Political parties can not be depended upon for communistic ideas. Radical improvements are preferably taken 'out of politics' and placed under the supervision of the citizens in the formation of leagues, associations, commissions or boards. The ideal city of our century must have civic beauty as well as civic safety, and the responsibility rests on every individual, as a part of a unit, to accomplish this end."

Not Every Man—

Who is on his knees is in a position to propose marriage or support a wife if he should be accepted.

Who thinks burning thoughts can be relied upon to set the world on fire, or escape getting himself into a white heat of passion.

Who spells a spade a spade does so from a love of plain speaking; may be short of synonyms.

Who is too far away to hear the orator is nearly as badly disappointed as some fellows who sit close to the speaker's stand.

Who puts his best foot forward can be justly proud of the exhibition he makes of his understanding.

Who talks glibly of his "morning tub," spends hours with the manicure, ostentatiously displays a toothbrush, discourses learnedly on the quality of soap or picks his teeth with a nail file, really lives a life of perfect cleanliness.

Not Her Husband.

Mrs. De Troop (who is shortsighted)—Good morning, Mrs. Simpkins. Your husband must be very fond of gardening. I see him the first thing every morning down in the bottom of the garden. And how well he looks, to be sure.

Mrs. Simpkins turned her back and slammed the door in her neighbor's face.

The latter, aghast, went to tell her daughter.

"And you told her, mother, that the thing in the onion bed was her husband?"

"Of course I did."

"Well, that's not her husband, that's a scarecrow."

Poultry farming, as all other branches of agriculture, has suffered by the fact of so many people thinking it quite an easy thing to tend fowls. So it is, and there is good money being made at it, too, if one only knows the way.

As the young pigs come in, do not allow them to lose their baby fat, but keep them in good condition right from the time they are weaned.

Here are a few suggestions which will be well worth remembering: When a horse is tired he is much more subject to colic. Do not change the feed of the horse during heavy spring work. There is much more danger in feeding corn or wheat than there is in feeding oats. Water your horses when you first bring them in from the field; then let them eat hay for a half-hour, and give them their grain last. Pull their shoes off while doing the spring work.

It is important to have clear vision. Even the potato must have sound eyes.

All Was Complete.

"Yes, sir," said the phonograph man to the hesitating candidate, "it's the only up-to-date way of electioneering. All you have to do is to talk into our machine and we scatter your burning thoughts all over the country, through the medium of 500 loaded records."

"It sounds good," said the candidate. "What will it cost?"

"Here is a card showing our graded schedule of prices. And with every machine we set up a 34-inch electric fan."

"What's the fan for?" inquired the candidate.

"The fan supplies the wind," replied the man.

Knew Too Much.

"Bring me a blue pencil," said the boss.

"There isn't a blue pencil in the office," answered the smart clerk, "but I can make any ordinary pencil write blue."

"How?" queried the boss.

"By writing it b-l-u-e," answered the smart clerk.

And the boss informed him that he could look for another job, as he couldn't afford to pay the wages his excessive knowledge demanded.

CHINESE GUNMEN IN STREET FIGHT

Deadly Feud Between Hip Sing Tong and Four Brothers.

TWO DYING FROM SHOT WOUNDS

Chinatown in New York Cut Off From City by Wall of Police—Eight Arrested With Guns in Hands During Street Fight.

New York, June 27.—Big Bill Hodgins, captain of police in Chinatown, stood in the doorway of Jimmy Naughton's livery stable in Mott street, just above the Church of the Transfiguration. He looked east along Pell street and yawned.

The big triangular flag of the Four Brothers was whipping from the roof of the Chinese Delmonico's at 24 Pell street. The Four Brothers society were getting ready for a banquet, a double celebration in honor of the ancient four who founded the clan of Chu Gain, a Four Brothers gun man, who was acquitted recently of the charge that he shot and killed Chung Fook, of the Leong Tong, on April 10. Pell street, therefore, was filling slowly with Four Brothersmen. There was nothing to indicate anything but an ordinary, sleepy afternoon in Chinatown.

A sudden noise like several packs of big fire crackers being set off all at once came from the corner they had just passed. Hodgins and Sergeant Magner, wheeling round, saw eight or ten Chinese shooting at each other from both sides of Pell street. Splintered window glass was tinkling on the pavements. Sightseers were scrambling for outlets, any way to get them out of the furious turmoil. Chinese were dodging and twisting through the crowd, screaming shrilly. Chinese mothers, no longer placid, were snatching their babies from the windows. Policemen were running from all directions, sounding their whistles.

In front of Sing Yen's candy booth, a Chinaman was lying on the sidewalk, throwing his head in agony from side to side and utterly squeaks of pain. It was Sing Yen, himself, a peaceable man, but caught between the gunmen of the Four Brothers and the On Leong Tong. A few feet away from Sing Yen Jay Gin Sing of the Four Brothers, shot in the abdomen and bleeding dreadfully, while Chu Pan, also of the Four Brothers, sat with his back to the wall of the tenement with a bullet in his thigh.

The battle ended as suddenly as it began. Capt. Hodgins and Magner caught two of the fleeing Tong men and turned them over to patrolmen Precinct Detectives who had been on duty in Chinatown grabbed three more who were scuttling away. Within half an hour there were 100 bluecoats in Chinatown and Capt. Hodgins had closed the district to visitors. Chinatown was cut off from the rest of New York last night by a wall of policemen.

In the Hudson Street hospital Sin Yen and Gin Ching were dying from their wounds and Chu Pang was held there a prisoner. Eight Chinese were locked up in the Elizabeth street station, five of them caught with pistols in their hands or their pockets, three of them picked up as witnessed. The trouble was another flare up of the feud which started months ago between the Four Brothers and the On Leon Tong. Formerly the On Leongs had warred against the Hip Sing Tong for the gambling privileges of Chinatown, but the Four Brothers succeeded to the claims of the weakened Hip Sings

Seeks to Dissuade Gov. Hughes Entering Supreme Court.

MEETING MOST IMPORTANT ONE

Col. Roosevelt Takes Position Gov. Hughes Is Needed to Save Party in New York State—To See Taft Wednesday Night.

Oyster Bay N. Y., June 27.—When Col. Roosevelt forsakes the calm and quiet of Sagamore Hill on Tuesday for the gayety of the Harvard commencement at Cambridge, he will mark the beginning of what is likely to be a pretty important meeting. It is known here that the colonel has arranged a conference with President Taft at Beverly. This is certain.

Mr. Roosevelt will hold his interview with the president Wednesday night or possibly Thursday. He will go from Cambridge to Swamp Scott, Mass., whence he will be driven over to Beverly in the big touring car. It has been suggested by men who are close to the colonel that Senator Lodge and Congressman Nicholas Longworth would not surprise anybody if they dropped in along with the ex-president. And perchance Gov. Hughes.

Those who have discussed politics with Roosevelt know that he has not yet made up his mind in regard to the Taft administration. He hasn't endorsed or given any hint that he favors what the president is doing and he will not make a public announcement until he has the chance of feeling his way. The colonel is very busy at present attempting to get a line on how things stand, both locally and nationally. The wires to Sagamore Hill are getting hotter and the mail is increasing tremendously every day.

It is said that Mr. Roosevelt is going to try to get Mr Taft to exert his influence upon Gov. Hughes to give up the federal supreme court bench for a third term in the gubernatorial chair at Albany. The colonel is dead in earnest about Hughes saving the Republican party in New York state and the visit of Hughes to Sagamore Hill some time soon will be a mighty interesting one.

Diamond Is Found by Capt. George Berke and Returned, Receiving $100 from Labor Leader.

Atlantic City, N. J., June 27.—Engaged in a game of "bathing suit baseball" with President Samuel Gompers of the American Federation of Labor, and Frank Morrison, secretary of the powerful labor organization, and other leaders on the beach, John Mitchell, one of the executive council of the federation and former head of the Mine Workers' union, lost the $1,000 diamond ring presented to him by his admirers after settlement of the big Pennsylvania coal mine strike.

Capt. George Berke, a veteran life guard, found the ring and received a $100 bill from the labor leader. Mitchell arrived here with Gompers, Morrison, James Pritchett and other leaders of the federation to attend the annual executive council of the Building Trades and Metal Workers' departments, which will take place at the Hotel Windsor today.

SENATE TO PROBE BRIBERY CHARGES

House Also to Join in Investigation of Corruption.

TO AIR THE WHOLE SCANDAL

Efforts to Confine the Sifting Merely to the McMurray Contracts Is Squelched—Inquiry May Lead to Men in High Places.

Washington, June 27.—Congress in its closing hour ordered a full and thorough investigation of Senator Gore's charges of bribery and corruption in connection with legislation affecting the moneys and property of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians.

Independent resolutions for this purpose were adopted by the senate and house. Not a dissenting voice was raised. Some of the men alleged to be involved preferred that the investigations be confined merely to an inqury as to the validity of the contracts made with the Indians and whether or not the fees sought by the attorneys were reasonable.

But there was an insistent demand on the part of senators and members who have no connection with the scandal for the most sweeping investigation possible in order that they personally may be cleared of any knowledge of the matter.

As a result no opposition was manifested in the senate to a resolution proposed by Senator Hughes of Colorado, and in the house a substitute was adopted for the inadequate resolution offered by Congressman Bird McGuire of Oklahoma.

Following the adoption of the resolution the vice president appointed the following men to conduct the investigation for the senate: Wesley L. Jones, of Washington, chairman; Theodore E. Burton, of Ohio; Coe I. Crawford, of South Dakota; Charles J. Hughes Jr., of Colorado; Leroy Percy, of Mississippi.

The speaker announced the house committee as follows: Charles H. Burke, of South Dakota, chairman; Philip Campbell, of Kansas; Clarence B. Miller, of Minnesota; John H. Stephens, of Texas; Edward W. Saunders, of Virginia.

Leaders showed little disposition to have investigated the charges that members of congress and two former senators were interested in the agreements as alleged by Senator Gore. The matter was so pregnant with serious possibilities for the Republican party, however, that, after careful consideration the conclusion was reached that an investigation would have to be made.

Action was forced in part by the Democrats. Senator Hughes rose in the senate and offered a resolution directing an investigation specifically into the charges made by the Oklahoma senator. No obstacles were placed in the way of its adoption and it was passed unanimously.

The house action followed a demand and personal explanation made by Congressman Bird McGuire. A resolution was adopted authorizing the speaker to appoint a committee of five to make a sweeping investigation to determine whether, in connection with the McMurray or any other contracts with the Indians of the five civilized tribes, including the Chickasaws and Choctaws, "bribery, corruption, fraud, or undue influence' was used to secure their validation.

The committee was authorized under the terms of the resolution to visit Oklahoma, to summon witnesses, to compel testimony, and to prosecute for perjury.

A GLASS EYE.

It Turned the Scale In a Matter of Love.

By THOMAS R. DEANE.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

I counted Jeannette abroad. There is no better field for lovemaking than traveling about with nothing to do but enjoy oneself, or, rather, oneselves, for as "it takes two to make a bargain," so it takes two to make love. Jeannette and I met at Sorrento, where we sat in a pavilion in the midst of an orange grove looking on the bay of Naples spread out several hundred feet below us. Spoony young men are always talking to spoony young women about fickleness, and I found a convenient illustration in the ever changing hues of the Mediterranean. Besides, there is something in the Italian climate to quicken love. It is soft and balmy, yet the skies are bright and blue.

Then in Rome we dawdled through the Forum and sat on the stone seats in the Coliseum just as youths and maidens did some eighteen centuries before, except that the Roman couples of those days were there to see gladiators kill one another or wild beasts feed on lean Christians. But we were under the blue sky of Italy, and, as I have said, the Italian climate quickens love.

From Rome we drifted into Florence and stood at evening looking over the stone coping of the Ponte Vecchio at the placid Arno flowing beneath us while the last rays of the setting sun gilded the neighboring hills. And—as I think I have remarked before—the Italian climate is conducive to love.

But I didn't say that about the English climate. The English climate is conducive to—let me see—the English climate is conducive to colds, sore throat, rheumatism, the blues. I wonder that the English people ever marry for love, and I fancy there is less marrying there on that account than in any land on the face of the earth.

It may seem that this is not only disagreeable, but a digression. It may be the former, but it is not the latter. At any rate, it is a part of my story, for

MY GAZE WAS FASTENED ON HIS GLASS EYE.

Jeannette and I parted in Florence, having plighted our troth on the elevated Piazza Michelangelo overlooking the city. We were sitting beneath one of half a dozen statues of David, each being the original statue, and came together again in England.

What a change, not only in the climate, but in us—I mean in Jeanette! In Italy she had been responsive to my slightest whisper. Indeed, the slighter the whisper the better it accorded with our mellifluent surroundings. In England I, being hoarse, was obliged to speak to her with the voice of a megaphone, and she, being deafened by a cold, could scarcely hear me. Instead of leaning her head against my arm and looking up at me with a happy smile, as she had done in the Italian moonlight, speaking of poets and painters, she sat regarding me with watery eyes, saying that she wished it would stop raining.

This story goes to prove that what writers on the development of civilization say about the effect of climate on peoples is true. In Italy Jeannette and I had loved; in England the marriage question became one of practical advantage. I found that I was not as much in love as I had thought I was until Jeannette indicated that she was meditating giving me the grand bounce. This brought me to my senses. Young Lord Crickenback, who never appeared without a very large flower in his buttonhole, a very small silk hat on his head and a monocle on his right eye, was the man who taught me that, despite my present watery surroundings, I did not wish to surrender Jeannette. Why had I not continued to keep her in Italy, or why did I not insist on the knot being tied before coming to this land, where there is no sentiment, only interest? This Lord Crickenback had nothing whatever to recommend him except that he had a title. Even with his title on the sunny shores of the Mediterranean I could have snapped my fingers at him.

Jeannette did not break with me. I think she would have done so had not the sun occasionally broken through the clouds to remind her of those happy days she had passed with me at Sorrento, at Florence and at Rome. On such days I noticed a sudden demonstration of a dormant love for me that had not entirely died within her. I wished on such sunny days that there were some places where one could go similar to the Piazza Michelangelo at Florence or the Corso in Rome. But there are no such places in London. The most enjoyable is Hyde park, but the sun doesn't shine long enough to dry the benches. And a wet bench is no place for spooning. One bright day I took her to the Tower, and we sat together in the courtyard of the old pile. I was about to whisper something tender in her ear when she shuddered.

"What is it?" I asked concernedly.

"That plate in the ground. It says that on this spot Lady Jane Grey, Catharine Howard and others were executed."

We arose and walked away.

Crickenback continued to hang about Jeannette, and I saw that with her it was a case of interest versus love. I wished that I might find some method of turning the scale in my favor. I have usually been considered to have about me something of that resource for which we Americans are distinguished, but who ever heard of a man in love—really in love, I mean—being able to think dispassionately about anything concerning the winning or the losing of the girl he loves.

I met Wackford in London. He had just come over. Wackford and I have been bosom friends since we were little kids. A man in love needs some one to talk to, and I talked to Wackford. I told him the whole story. He listened to me attentively, sympathetically.

"What you want," he said when I had finished, "is some device by which you can save the young lady from herself—and for yourself, understand?"

"That's it exactly."

"Very well. You show me this Crookedback, or whatever his name is, and I'll see what I can do for you."

The very next afternoon I drove with Wackford in Rotten row, and we saw Crickenback. You can meet anybody that belongs to the upper classes in Rotten row.

"Why, the fellow wears a glass eye!" said Wackford.

"How do you know?"

"Can't I tell the difference between a glass and a real eye? Of course I can. There—see the sun shining on it! Do you suppose he has told her about it?"

"Don't know. I never heard her speak of it."

The next time I was with Jeannette I asked her, "Did Lord Crickenback ever speak of any misfortune, any mutilation?"

"No. Why do you ask?"

"Oh, nothing; at least nothing that it's my business to tell you."

"I insist upon knowing."

I demurred for awhile, then told her what Wackford had said about his lordship's glass eye.

"I don't believe it," she said.

"You'd better ask him." I replied.

"Ask him? Do you suppose I would do that?"

Every time I saw Crickenback after that my gaze was fastened willy nilly on his glass eye. I wondered if it had the same effect on Jeannette. I asked Wackford when he was going to give me the device he had referred to, and he replied:

"Don't know. Did you tell her about his glass eye?"

I admitted that I had, and Wackford turned the subject.

Whatever was the cause, Lord Crickenback from this time seemed to be losing ground with Jeannette. As he lost I gained. Then I perked up and played indifferent. This was followed by a coldness between Jeannette and me in which she seemed saddened, and eventually came a reconciliation. I determined to strike while the iron was hot and made it a condition of my forgiveness for her defection from me to Crickenback that we should be married at once.

We were married in London, Wackford being my best man. I insisted on a wedding trip to Italy, but since it was not now the season for visiting the far south we contented ourselves with Lake Como. While out in a boat one evening, pulled by an Italian oarsman who could not understand English, I asked my wife to make a clean breast of her part of the coming of Lord Crickenback between us.

"I was not in love with him," she said, "but a title to a woman is very tempting. I thought how nice it would be to be called Lady Crickenback and to be introduced to the real English nobility."

"And why didn't you do it?" I asked.

"Because I loved you, of course."

"How did you happen to come to a decision that you would rather have be and love than a title and no love?"

"You insist in knowing?"

"Yes, I do."

"Well, it was the glass eye."

"You don't mean it?"

"Yes. For my life whenever I saw him after you told me he had a glass eye I couldn't keep from looking at it whenever he was with me. At last it grew so repulsive that I had to send him away."

When he returned to London Wackford called on us.

"By the bye, Wack," I said, "by giving me the fact of Crickenback's wearing a glass eye you fixed me up with Jeannette."

"He has two now."

"What do you mean by that? Is he stone blind?"

"No; he has left off his monocle and has taken on a pair."

I looked at Jeannette, and Jeannette looked at me; then we smiled.

"You wanted me to suggest something," said Wackford, "to break the Crickenback spell, and I gave you the glass eye, which is synonymous with eyeglass. You owe me one."

CLOSING THE HOUSE.

Hints as to How This Important Duty Should be Done.

Cover the carpets with dust sheets or newspapers.

Take down the curtains and put them away; remove chair covers and fold them.

Take down pictures and lay them carefully on sofas or beds.

Put china in cupboards or drawers, and when this is not possible cover them over with a light dust sheet or newspaper.

Cover up every piece of furniture in dust sheets or newspapers.

To avoid any risk of damage from damp take care that nothing is left near windows or fireplaces, and that the furniture is packed in the center of each room.

Carefully close and fasten all windows except in rooms where there is a geyser or gas stove.

Take special notice of skylights, and leave nothing where any wet can penetrate.

Wrap up steel fenders and fire irons, and do not leave them near the fireplaces.

If afraid of moth, shake and fold blankets and woolen goods, sprinkle the edges with pepper, and put lumps of napthaline between them.

Should there be any place where the rain comes in, leave cloths, or wedge with old rage.

Empty the lamps and oil stoves, and if the house is damp, grease with mutton fat any metal article which might be liable to rust.

Lastly, pull down blinds and fasten the shutters and leave the house under the charge of the police, asking them to give it particular notice.

All valuables, such as silver, should be sent to the bank.

Why She Hurried.

"Oh!" snapped the girl with gray eyes who was hastily trying to button gloves, "I might have known that it would be out of the question for anything to go right today!"

She got down on her knees to search under the chiffonier for the button which had come off. When she struggled to her feet her hat was over one ear and her veil was crooked and she had not found the button.

The girl turned pale. "I wish this day was over!" she sobbed. "Everything goes wrong! I'll miss that train and be late for dinner and Jack hates to wait. Oh, dear! How I loathe black gloves with a brown suit, but I'll have to wear black gloves now!"

The front door shut on a fold of her skirt and the resultant tug at her belt loosened the fastening, so that she had to go back aond repair the damage to her appearance.

When she emeregd again she began to run toward the suburban station, four blocks away. She heard the roar of the oncoming train. As she slammed her dime before the ticket window the train was at a stand. She staggered up the stairs just intime to get a good view of the last car platform as it pulled away.

"Well," she said violently, "Well!"

For a minute she walked the deserted platform. Then she went inside the stuffy waiting room.

It would be useless to try to explain to Jack when he met her on the arrival of the next train in the city, why he had been kept waiting a half hour thinking things about the unreliability and unpunctuality of women! And the pleasant little dinner which might have meant so much would be spoiled—just spoiled by her annoyance and her nervousenss. When one had to hurry so and things went wrong one never looked one's best.

At this point the girl she hated worse than any other walked into the waiting room and headed straight for her, so she was obliged to sit and talk to that awful girl the rest of the time!

When the train came at last and she stepped in she remembered with a pang that her new gold-mesh handbag she had intended to carry was reposing in its case at home.

Half way to the city something happened and the train stopped for five minutes, which seemed hours to her.

Getting out of the train a big man trod on her toes and she also remembered she had forgotten her handkerchief with the real lace edge.

When she reached the place where Jack was to meet her she was tired to death and ready to go back home and cry herself to sleep. She looked horrid, she knew, and she loathed all dinners and theaters.

As she hastily glanced around and it dawned on her that Jack was not standing there with anxiety and annoyance an his face, she realized that the worst had happened. He had got tired of waiting, had concluded she had broken their evening's engagement, and so had gone away!

Just then a red-faced, anxious young man fore madly through the crowd and made for her corner.

"I'm so sorry!" he gasped. "And you've been waiting all this time! I've nearly broken my neck trying, but I simply could not get here a minute earlier. I don't know how to excuse myself—"

"Oh," breathed the young woman with noble generosity, the world suddenly righting itself and her toilet as sudenly settling into perfection and beauty. "Oh, that's all right, Jack! I understand perfectly! You don't need to feel bad about it at all."—Frank H. Sweet.

Auto Language.

"Daughter, who was that young nuisance honking in front of the house last night?"

"It was Montmorency, father. Sixteen honks means, 'I love you.'"

Those Foolish Questions.

"Hello, old man. Back from the seashore?"

"Not at all, old chap. I'm still there."

Is Yo'?

Uncle Zebediah had inherited a large crop of nephews, whom he had endeavored to bring up the way they should go, often finding it very difficult to make ends meet, when, to his intense disgust he learned that one of them had taken unto himself a wife without the knowledge or consent of the old man.

"'Mose, I'se done been tol' yo's married," he reproached his kinsman, meeting him on the street. "Is you'?"

"I'se not sayin' I aint," replied Moses evasively.

"I didn't ask yo' is yo' ain't, I asked yo' ain't yo' is. Is yo'?"—Brooklyn Life.

FROM WASHINGTON.

(From our regular correspondent.)

Congress at Washington is expediting work with a view to an early adjournment, which it is thought by some will take place on Saturday, the 25th inst., but which others think will not occur much before July 2 or 3. After three months of uncertainty as to its fate the bill admitting the territories of Arizona and New Mexico to statehood was taken up by the Senate on Thursday and passed, after a brief debate of not more than two hours, and thus two more large territories are added to what is called the "Sisterhood of States." All the speeches were favorabe to the creation of the two states, but the Democrats of the Senate favored the House bill. As passed the bill provides for the admission as states of the two territories after a constitution has been adopted by each of them, which constitution must be approved by the President and ratified by Congress. There will be wild rejoicing in Arizona and New Mexico, for onty a few days ago hope of achieving statehood during the present session of Congress had been given up.

* * *

After the adjournment of Congress there will be prompt departure from Washington of the members of the Cabinet and other prominent officers of the civil, military and naval services of the government. The Secretary of War left Washington last night for a trip atound the world. He will visit the Philippines, Ruisia, Siberia, China and Europe, sailing on June 28 by the Pacific Mail Steamship Line. He is accompanied by his wife and son. Brigadier General Edwards, who has charge of the Bureau of Insular Affairs, with Mrs Edwards and their daughter will accompany the War Secretary. Gen. Edwards has often made the trip, on two occasions accompanying President Taft, who was at that time Secretary of War. The President and Mrs. Taft will go to their New England home. The ambassadors and other representatives of foreign countries will dirperse to the seashore and mountain resorts and the capital will see them no more until the middle of September or first of October. Many Washingtonians have left the city to be present at the festivities incident on the return of ex-President Roosevelt after his fifteen months' absence.

THAT PLAYGROUND

Adrian has taken the matter of a playground for the young folks in good earnest and has gone so far as to appoint the Board of Education to take the matter in charge.

One man, feeling the need of such a place, has bought a vacant lot for his grandson, and others would do so if they could afford it.

Various sums have been suggested and now that the idea is in motion, they will undoubtedly succeed. Hurry up, Tecumseh!

ALFALFA CULTURE.

Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station at Wooster, in circular No. 91, says that alfalfa is being grown with more or less success in every county in that that state; with greater success upon the rich and well drained limestone soils of the western half, than upon the shale clay and sandy loams of eastern Ohio, although under these much less favorable natural conditions success has been attained by many.

There are a unmber of conditions which are fatal to alfalfa. Among these, lack of drainage stands well to the front. Soils not having natural sub-surface drainage, i. e., a porous subsoil, should be tiled. While good surface drainage is helpful, trouble may be expected with a heavy, retentive subsoil, unless tile drainage is resorted to. Alfalfa will not thrive where the water level is permanently within three feet or less of the surface. It will stand flood water for a considerable time during the dormant season, unless the water freezes solid, but during the growing season two or more days' flooding is usually disastrous.

No farm crop seems as sensitive to soil acidity as alfalfa. There is no use to seed alfalfa in Ohio where red clover fails to do well and sorrel is working in in its place. Uplands usually become acid before bottom lands. As a general rule the first thing to do with all lands other than limestone, which have been in cultivation very many years, is to apply lime in some form. Not infrequently limestone soils which have been in cultivation for many years have had the lime pretty well leached out of the surface soil and will give better results if limed.

When in doubt as to whether lime is needed it is well to put out a small plot just to determine the needs of the soil.

It should be remembered that alfalfa is no ordinary crop. That if successful it will last four or five years and perhaps longer. Accordingly mistakes made with this crop mean more than with our common annuals. As stated above, one should make his plans for alfalfa from one to three years in advance, filling the soil with organic matter and plant food and cleaning it of weeds. It is not possible to plow and prepare a good seed bed for alfalfa in a week's time, as is frequently done for other crops. Time is an important factor in preparing a seed bed for alfalfa, and enough time should be taken to accomplish the desired result, viz., a firm, fine, moist and clean seed bed.

Betwixt and Between.

Miss Uppson—"Have you met the Neurox girls?"

Miss DeSwell—"No. What is their position in society?"

Miss Uppson—"It's sort of betwixt and between. They aren't exactly nobody, and yet they aren't really anybody."

This Is Awful.

"It's queer that women are so fond of tea," remarked the cheerful idiot.

"Why is it queer?" asked the typewriter boarder.

"Because," exclaimed the c. i., "it is the beginning of trials troubles and tribulations."

SMALL POX AT THE U. OF M.

During the final examination before the dental board at the U. of M. Henry Marks of Port Huron but who came from Chicago for the examinations, was stricken with small pox and is in the detention hospital. About 90 others were to have taken the examinations and all but one have been vaccinated by the health officers. It is found out that there are 192 cases through the State and failure to report is blamed for its spread.

BREIF AND BREEZY

The Chicago Record-Herald has called, in a loud and ominous tone of voice for Mr. Lorimer's resignation. The Senator, it is feared, is extremely hard of hearing with respect to that, however.

Mr. Walter Wellman has relieved our anxiety greatly. He carefully explains that Mr. Roosevelt surely will mix in politics when he returns, unless he does nothing of the kind.

"Nat" Goodwin probably will find it hard to get any more advertising out of the matrimonial game, unless he should marry airy, fairy Lillian Russell.

It is now being figured in Washington that if Congress quits work now and does nothing more it will be possible to adjourn the first of July.

Fingy Connors has "said farewell to the New York Democracy". If the democracy is wise, it will quarantine rigidly against "Fingy's" return.

A summery effect that is decidedly pleasing pervades the July number of The Ladies World, just received. The fiction, of which there seems even more than usual, is bright and entertaning and the departments are filled seasonable matter that will save time, thought and labor to every housewife. The opening story is one of school life by Kate Milner Rabb. It is called Miss Fidelia's Tune and Time, and is the romance of the pretty school teacher, although the little blind god plays his usual pranks before happiness comes. The Disciplining of Lover Girl, by Clarice Vallette, tells in a delightful way of the attempt of a maiden aunt to bring up her infant niece by rule. There is also the second installment of a charming three part novelette, A Garden Enchanted; The Fall and the Rebuilding. Among the special articles Conservation and the Housewife is worthy of special mention, for it shows in an easily understood way what the continued destruction of the forests means.—(New York 50 cents a year.)

SPECIAL MEETING HELD SATURDAY, JUNE 25

At a stockholders' special meeting held at the factory offices of the Anthony Company on Saturday, the 25th inst., every share of stock in the big institution was represented either in person or by proxy. This in itself is remarkable, but more remarkable still is the fact that every share of that stock confirmed the actions of the Board in negotiating the sale of the property. Not a single dissenting vote was cast, something almost unheard of in a transaction of magnitude and a distinct compliment to the relations existing between officers and stockholders.

Accountants are beginning to arrive from the offices of the new company to verify inventories and other important data, but the actual transfer will not take place until July 1.

One of the subjects of local discussion, ever since this deal was announced, has been—"Will the new company remain in Tecumseh?" Even though the Herald, from the most reliable sources of information, had confirmed the fact that the new owners would not only remain but would probably greatly increase the capacity of the plant, there has been a note of suspicion sounded on the streets. We are now glad to be able to say that as a further indication of their intentions, the new company has authorized the immediate purchase of two additional acres of land adjoining the present large tract.

And right here we want to say that it seems to us that our otherwise progressive village could vastly improve its method of greeting a new business ally.

When the Anthony Company was formed a great many said it would never be able to compete with the older concerns. When it had conquered all mechanical obstacles and required ample capital, the same old crowd said it couldn't be raised in Tecumseh. But it was. And now that Tecumseh has secured a branch of the biggest commercial institution in the world, there are those who say "It won't stay."

The best method to employ if one wishes to have his guest leave on an early train is to NOT make that guest thoroughly welcome, and to be suspicious of his intentions. Tecumseh has an important guest within her gates, we hope "The Biggest Little Town," will make her "Biggest Little Bow" to the "Biggest Corporation on Earth," and may they live happily ever after.

AWFUL ACCIDENT

SAD DROWNING OF REV. C. S. TUBBS OF CLINLON

Y. M. C. A. Camp Saddened by Terrible Catastrophe.

On the afternoon of Friday, June 24, a boat load of five from the camp went across the lake to bathe, E. T. May, Rev. C. S. Tubbs, Herbert Henderson, George Townsend and F. W. Stevenson being the occupants.

They had indulged in quite a frolic and were feeling quite lively as they came back to camp. Seeing a couple of young men treading water, and thinking them walking on the bottom of the lake, they all leaped into the water with the exception of Mr. May. Herbert Henderson, who could not swim, swung to the boat when he realized that they were in deep water, but Mr. Tubbs went to the bottom with the first leap, and rose to the surface struggling for breath. George Townsend of Clayton and F. W. Stevenson of Addison tried to rescue him and Alvin Stoddard of North Rome, one of the young men in the water at the time, clung to him and went down with him the last time, only saving himself by an effort.

The lake was dragged with barbed wire without success. Three men came over from Devil's Lake with a light and hook, and finally raised his body at the third effort. He was in the water about five hours.

Dr. Hartzog sent a telegram to W. S. Kimball of Clinton and C. H. Halliday, Dr. Davis and J. D. Hause went at once in E. A. Clark's automobile. John Schweid was the chauffeur and took them over to the lake in a very short time. Dr. Davis and J. D. Hause remained over night. Saturday morning James Hause went up with the ambulance and the auto went to bring back those who remained.

A great gloom was cast over Clinton when the news reached there, for Mr. Tubbs had endeared himself to all. especially among the young man and boys. He leaves a wife and two little ones to mourn his untimely death, besides a host of relatives and and friends.

The funeral was held from the Congregational church, Clinton, at 2 o'clock Monday afternoon.

CLASS REUNION

For more than 20 years it has been the practice of the class taught by Mrs. Helen M. Griswold to hold a reunion on her birthday and young and old have gathered together from far and near.

A few years ago death claimed our much loved teacher and we wondered what the future had in store for us. Mrs. Lemar Barnes took us under her motherly care and we have met from Sabbath to Sabbath listening to her teachings. By a strange coincidence her birthday was on the same date as that of Mrs. Griswold, and June 24th is held especially dear on that account.

Owing to circumstances this year the class met June 25 instead of 24 for their annual picnic. The meeting was at the home of Mrs. Christian Coller Saturday afternoon. The hours passed pleasantly in social conversasion and merry laughter. Mrs. Waldron had the 1st picture ever taken of the class, 19 in number, four of whom with their teacher, have passed over to the other side. A picture was taken Saturday which will be cherished in the years to come as this one has been.

A bountiful supper was served and when the sun sank low behind the western hills the company dispersed, pleased with their meeting and looking forward to another year's reunion.

INDIGESTION

Relief in Five Minutes and Permanent Cure or Money Back.

When C. A. Wright & Son state that they have a remedy that is guaranteed to cure any man or woman who suffers from food fermentation which causes belching, sour stomach, gas eruciations, heartburn and that lump of lead feeling in the abdomen or money back what are the poor stomach sufferers in Tecumseh and vicinity going to do about it?

The name of the most remarkable stomach prescription is Mi-o-na. Most people call them Mi-o-na stomach tablets because they know that there is no remedy so good for indigestion or stomach disorders. Here is one opinion:

"I have been troubled with indigestion for more than a year. I bought one box of Mi-o-na and it cured me. Now I would not be without a box in the house for $50.00. It saves a lot of doctor bills when you can be cured for 50 cents.

You can use my name if you want to."—Arthur Sederquest, 6 Nichols St., Wakefield, Mass. Nov. 7, 1909.

Mi-o-na stomach tablets cost 50 cents a box at druggists everywhere and at C. A. Wright & Son's, Tecumseh.

WILEY POINTS TO COFFEE FRAUDS

Says Millions Are Stolen From Public Each Year.

CHEAP SUBSTITUTES HARMFUL

According to Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, not 15 per cent of the coffee sold in the United States is of the quality guaranteed. Millions each year, says the doctor, are being stolen from the American people by the adulterators and misbranders who are selling their fraudulent products in the guise of the genuine article.

"One of the chief coffee frauds is in the classification of coffee," says Dr. Wiley. "Nearly all coffee in the United States is sold as either Mocha or Java, while, as a matter of fact, fully 85 per cent of all American coffee imports are from Brazil. There is very little real Mocha or Java brought here now, for the Brazilian coffee has driven it from the market not only because of quality, but because it lies closer to hand. The American people are using a billion pounds of coffee a year at present, and the majority of it is the long berry Santos, which seems to have the demand behind it.

Ground Coffee at Fault.

"The great trouble with the coffee business is the deceit practiced in the preparation of so called ground coffee. The makers of these blends are in many instances grossly deceiving the public, for they are using the very cheapest grades of coffee berry—something they can purchase for from 3 to 4 cents per pound—and this, in addition to the husks, scrapings, dustings and broken bits, is ground up together and placed in cans with a fancy label and sold at from 35 to 40 cents a pound as a highly superior special brand with a lot more buncombe of the same sort. The facts of the case are just as I have said, and the curious feature of the illicit traffic is that first class Brazilian coffee is so cheap that it is a wonder that any one could find it worth while to adulterate it at all.

"In Europe there are some 1,600 factories that are turning out hundreds of millions of pounds of imitation coffee made from pits of olives, pulverized shells of nuts and some cereal husks all mixed together with molasses as a binder, pressed into molds and roasted. The resultant bean is sold as coffee. Since the enactment of the pure food law in this country there are not, I believe, any factories of that sort, but we have to exercise constant vigilance to keep those European frauds out. As a matter of fact, no one is really safe in buying ground or roasted coffee, for, while it is not permitted to import broken beans or siftings, somehow they do get into bags and—and they are not thrown away.

Coffee Absolutely Harmless.

"As to the statement so frequently and speciously made that coffee is injurious, that is largely exaggeration. Coffee taken to excess will do harm. So will milk or any other substance. There are veritable coffee and tea drunkards, and because these suffer from the abuse of nutritious foods must we class these foods as pernicious and dangerous? The business of trying to sell a cereal mixture by picturing the awful effects supposed to follow the use of coffee is all tommyrot. No one who knows anything of food values would want to stuff in the first place, and I personally have no patience with the charlatans who are disposing of cereal mixture at 8 or 9 cents a pound as a substitute for coffee. It is nothing less than a plain lie to claim that it is a substitute, for it positively has none of the essential principles of coffee, and to say it has on the label is plain misbranding. It is claimed that for 1 cent two cups of excellent genuine coffee can be made from the Brazilian berry, and this, being so, would seem to make the cereal imitation very dear indeed."

GOVERNMENT AID TO TRUSTS.

How the Conservation of Coal Lands Is Playing Into the Hands of the Coal Barons.

Any inquiry into the increased cost of living may not improbably disclose something akin to a government trust running along with the private trusts to corner the necessities of life, says a writer in the Alaska-Yukon Magazine. It is beginning to appear that as fast as the government unnecessarily ties up, corners and sequesters certain classes of natural resources it increases the monopoly of similar resources and thereby tends to increase the cost to the consumer of every pound of nails, every pound of coal and every foot of lumber.

The theory of the geological survey in the withdrawing of coal lands is that by so doing more of the coal in the mines now being worked will be saved. And yet the estimates of this same geological survey show that coal measures in the United States contain coal enough to last the 90,000,000 of this country for 3,722 years without drawing upon the fabulously rich coal deposits of Alaska. The geological survey has recently reported that during the past year 7,675,000 acres of coal lands were withdrawn, and the form of withdrawal affecting 9,000,000 additional acres was altered in a manner to increase the sale price over 600 per cent. On 3,436,000 acres of coal land the government sale price is now $191,490,000, which last year could have been purchased at $62,477,000. No one accuses the wicked "coal barons" of having a hand in this, nor is it known that they are smiling behind their hands, but when we are berating them for coal famines and the high price of coal few stop to think of the price that the people are paying for thus conserving these coal lands.

Small Panic Ensues but Passengers Are Rescued—Loss Will Reach $150,000.

The fire broke out in the engine room of the Poughkeepsie while she was taking on frenght at the Highland wharf. There were ten passengers aboard, five of them women, who were rescued after causing a small panic. The total loss will reach $150,000

Sample Helps Frail Women

So many women are dragging out weary lives just because their digestive organs are weak. The result is poor circulation, nervousness and the verge of invalidism. It is often very unnecessary and the woman's own fault.

The first thing to do is to look to the welfare of your bowels. There the trouble usually lies. All physicians know that a large percentage of women are habitually constipated, and from this results indigestion, piles, weariness, etc., that women constantly complain of. But there is no use taking "female remedies" and things of that kind until you have started your bowels to moving. You will find that when the bowels move regularly once or twice a day all your petty ills will disappear. Take a good, mild laxative tonic like Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin for awhile and you will find yourself rapidly getting better and stronger, your bowels will regulate themselves and work at stated times, and then your headaches and dizziness will disappear. Don't take strong cathartic pills or salts, but just such a mild and pleasant-tasting remedy as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin.

You can obtain a bottle of your druggist for fifty cents or one dollar, and either size may be enough to permanently cure you. Thousands of women keep it regularly in the house and will no longer be without it, as it cured them and can be used with safety by every member of the family, down to the youngest child, but if you have never used it take the advice of Mrs. Earl S. Cox, 409 Twenty-fifth street, Moline, Ill., and Mrs. Ellen Dungan, Muncie, Ind., and send to Dr. Caldwell for a free trial bottle, as they did, and learn for yourself what it will do in your own case. That it will cure you, as it did them, there is no doubt.

Dr. Caldwell personally will be pleased to give you any medical advice you may desire for yourself or family pertaining to the stomach, liver or bowels absolutely free of charge. Explain your case in a letter and he will reply to you in detail. For the free sample simply send your name and address on a postal card or otherwise. For either request the doctor's address is Dr. W. B. Caldwell, R.500 Caldwell building, Monticello, Ill.

FAMILY ESCAPES DEATH

Lives of Eleven Chicago People Imperiled by Fire.

Police Sergeant Discovers the Blaze, Breaks into House, and Saves the Eleven Inmates.

Chicago, June 27.—The family of John Rynne, including nine children, were overcome by smoke and carried out of their burning home at 3539 West Thirty-Eighth street.

Although suffering severely from the effects of the smoke, all the victims revived after being carried into the open air.

The building was destroyed. The front part was occupied by a saloon conducted by Rynne, who, with his family, lived in rooms in the rear.

The children and their parents were asleep when Sergeant Bernard Murphy of Brighton Park station discovered the fire. Shouting to a pedestrian to send in an alarm he broke down the rear door and began the work of rescue.

DIES FROM A BROKEN NECK

Battle Creek Man Lived Six Hours After Fatal Accident.

Battle Creek, Mich., June 27.—After lingering unconscious for six hours, David S. Griffes, 76 years old, died from a broken neck. Griffes, a pattern maker at the Advance Thresher company, was riding his bicycle to work when the chain came off and the wheel tore down Kendall street.

Unable to stop it, Mr. Griffes was thrown over the handle bars, his head hitting the bridge railing and his neck being broken.

A telegram was sent to a daughter, Miss Martha Griffes, who is hurrying home from Texas to help her mother, who recently fell and sustained serious injuries from which she is just recuperating.

KEEP THE KIDNEYS WELL

Health is Worth Saving, and Some Tecumseh People Know How to Save It

Many Tecumseh people take their lives in their hands by neglecting the kidneys when they know these organs need help. Sick kidneys are responsible for a vast amount of suffering and ill health, but there is no need to suffer nor to remain in danger when all diseases and aches and pains due to weak kidneys can be quickly and permanently cured by the use of Doan's Kidney Pills. Here is a Tecumseh citizen's recommendation.

William W. Shurtz, Kilbuck street, Tecumseh, Mich., says: "I have used Doan's Kidney Pills at different times for ten years and have received such good results that I gladly recommend them. Whenever I feel that my kidneys are not doing their work properly, I procure a box of Doan's Kidney Pills at C. A. Wright & Son's drug store and through their use I am promptly relieved."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

If you find any substance in your baking injurious to health made from baking powder in this can there is—

$1000 In it for you

The makers of certain Baking Powders have recently been shouting, "purity, purity, parity!!" All other manufacturers have been openly accused of offering an impure product. Calumet, as the largest competitor, has of course come in for its share. But we simply smiled—as our business grew.

For Calumet has been backed for years by an offer of $1,000 for any substance injurious to health found in the baking prepared with it. This offer has never been challenged.

Don't you think that if there was the least trace of impurity in Calumet that our competitors would be the first to jump at this offer? Wouldn't this be an ideal way of putting our product off the market entirely.

Does not this and the fact that it complies with all pure food laws, both State and National, prove that Calumet is absolutely pure?

With the purity question settled—then Calumet is undoubtedly the best Baking Powder. It contains more leavening power, it is more uniform—every can is the same. It assures better results—and it is moderate in price.

A FRESH CALAMITY.

As though we had not already enough worriment, dodging automobiles and taking orders from the cook, we are now told that a hundred and fifty years hence there will be no more children. Viewed from either pole of the situation, this is indeed a woeful prophecy. If you are a lover of children, it makes your blood run cold to realize that they are so soon to be added to the schedule of extinct animals, along with the dodo and the sabre-toothed tiger; while if you belong to the opposite class, it is equally distressing to know that this promised millennium is so far remote that you will not be here to enjoy the day when Angora cats and bull pups shall hold undisputed place as household pets.

However, 'tis useless to bewail the oracle of statistics. A learned college professor has computed the rate at which human births are declining, and when he announces that they will come to an end during the next century and a half we have no alternative but to accept his dictum. It is not a guess; it is a mathematical certainty. To be sure, he might have kept this dismal prediction to himself, but 'tis one of the moral duties of a statistician to temper the present joys of life with melancholy auguries. The horrors of the future are calculated with the same precision as eclipses of the moon. Every twelfth marriage results in a divorce; and yours may be the twelfth. Once a week, with clock-like regularity, some one is murdered in New York, and every 10 hours somebody is attacked, and every 48 minutes a building catches fire, every seven minutes there is a funeral, and every three minutes somebody is arrested; so that if you can remain in New York for a month without getting into trouble you are to be congratulated. But even in your own village home you are not out of danger. Every two minutes somebody in the United States is killed by tuberculosis; and if that fails to daunt you, then you must know that every minute of the day four and a half persons are tagged by the undertaker; and if you are not one of the four you may be the half.

No prophet who conjures with statistics has ever yet predicted anything pleasant. 'Tis just as well, perhaps, that this is so; for, as Father Gregory once remarked, "Peradventure this world here is made troublesome unto us, lest we be delighted by the way and forget whither we are going." At all events, we may not plan ahead for a picnic without remembering that the day is coming when there will be no water on the earth, and our Yule-tide levity is checked by the knowledge that a hundred years from now there will be no more Christmas trees; also, no more coal. Indeed, whichever way we turn, the future is black with calamity. There will be no more lumber, no more fuel, no more teeth, and now, latest on the list, no more children. And if our descendants manage to survive these subtractions it will be merely to look forward to the time when a slowly cooling sun will put the ice-man and all his cousins out of business.—Lippincott's.

Effects of Civic Betterment Work.

Discussing the general movement for civic improvement as conducted by the American Civic Association and affiliated organizations, the Public Library Quarterly, published by the Kansas City Free Library by authority of the board of education, contained an editorial recently from the pen of Carrie Westlake Whitney, editor.

She wrote, in part:

"In municipal or civic betterment, not alone the comforts and pleasures of the people are considered, but the ethical side is developed by beautiful surroundings and refining influences. This awakening indicates that selfishness and sordidness are to be eradicated from the American soil and that every citizen will imbibe the noble sentiment of helpfulness and cultivate it for the general welfare of all.

"The problem of city improvement is the most pressing question of the day and the new conditions are studied with great attention. Cities are vieing with each other in ornamenting, in lighting and in making pleasing and commodious accommodations for the people. Slums, or poor tenement districts, are no longer permitted; parks, playgrounds, public baths are now necessary furnishings for well-organized cities.

"Political parties can not be depended upon for communistic ideas. Radical improvements are preferably taken 'out of politics' and placed under the supervision of the citizens in the formation of leagues, associations, commissions or boards. The ideal city of our century must have civi beauty as well as civic safety, and the responsibility rests on every individual, as a part of a unit, to accomplish this end."

Not Every Man—

Who is on his knees is in a position to propose marriage or support a wife if he should be accepted.

Who thinks burning thoughts can be relied upon to set the world on fire, or escape getting himself into a white heat of passion.

Who spells a spade a spade does so from a love of plain speaking; may be short of synonyms.

Who is too far away to hear the orator is nearly as badly disappointed as some fellows who sit close to the speaker's stand.

Who puts his best foot forward can be justly proud of the exhibition he makes of his understanding.

Who talks glibly of his "morning tub," spends hours with the manicure, ostentatiously displays a toothbrush, discourses learnedly on the quality of soap or picks his teeth with a nail file, really lives a life of perfect cleanliness.

Not Her Husband.

Mrs. De Troop (who is shortsighted)—Good morning, Mrs. Simpkins. Your husband must be very fond of gardening. I see him the first thing every morning down in the bottom of the garden. And how well he looks, to be sure.

Mrs. Simpkins turned her back and slammed the door in her neighbor's face.

The latter, aghast, went to tell her daughter.

"And you told her, mother, that the thing in the onion bed was her husband?"

"Of course I did."

"Well, that's not her husband, that's a scarecrow."

Poultry farming, as all other branches of agriculture, has suffered by the fest of so many people thinking it quite an easy thing to tend fowls. So it is, and there is good money being made at it, too, if one only knows the way.

As the young pigs come in, do not allow them to lose their baby fat, but keep them in good condition right from the time they are weaned.

Here are a few suggestions which will be well worth remembering: When a horse is tired he is much more subject to colic. Do not change the feed of the horse during heavy spring work. There is much more danger in feeding corn or wheat than there is in feeding oats. Water your horses when you first bring them in from the field; then let them eat hay for a half-hour, and give them their grain last. Pull their shoes off while doing the spring work.

It is important to have clear vision. Even the potato must have sound eyes.

Columbus, Ind., June 27. — For two miles eight horses owned by Boschen & Washington, stockmen here, ran on the Big Four railway track in front of an incoming passenger train and when a mile east of here the animals ran on a trestle, which delayed the train for three hours.

The horses were taken off the trestle by means of block and tackle and all of them were more or less injured.

Pope Refuses Resignation.

Rome, June 27.—Revelation of the fact that Cardinal Merry Del Val, papal secretary of state, had tendered his resignation to Pope Pius X., and that the pontiff had refused to accept it, caused a sensation here.

All Was Complete.

"Yes, sir," said the phonograph man to the hesitating candidate, "it's the only up-to-date way of electioneering. All you have to do is to talk into our machine and we scatter your burning thoughts all over the country, through the medium of 500 loaded records."

"It sounds good," said the candidate. "What will it cost?"

"Here is a card showing our graded schedule of prices. And with every machine we set up a 34-inch electric fan."

"What's the fan for?" inquired the candidate.

"The fan supplies the wind," replied the man.

Knew Too Much.

"Bring me a blue pencil," said the boss.

"There isn't a blue pencil in the office," answered the smart clerk, "but I can make any ordinary pencil write blue."

"How?" queried the boss.

"By writing it b-l-u-e," answered the smart clerk.

And the boss informed him that he could look for another job, as he couldn't afford to pay the wages his excessive knowledge demanded.

VOL. LX NO. 34. TECUMSEH, MICHIGAN, FRIDAY, JULY 1, 1910. WHOLE NO 92

COPYRIGHT, 1910, BY AMERICAN PRESS ASSOCIATION.

FOR Liberty and Union, inseparable and one,
We pledge the blood and treasure of brother, sire and son,
Now and forever, even as ever heretofore,
To hold this flag in heaven our valiant fathers bore
When they stood like a rock
In the battle surge and shock
To front and slay the red array
Who Freedom's path would block.

AT Lexington and Concord, at glorious Bunker Hill,
At Brandywine and Monmouth, this banner floated still;
At Yorktown all triumphant it bellied to the breeze,
A signal of defiance to tyrants over seas
Who had dared forge a chain
For the freemen of the brain,
For sturdy hands in birthright lands
This side the sundering main.

OUR Sumter's sullen ramparts, amid the wrath of lead,
Still proudly flew the symbol in white and blue and red;
At Gettysburg, Antietam, on Chattanooga Heights—
A hundred bloody battles, a thousand thrilling fights—
Still the flag fluttered there
In the rockets' lurid glare,
A staff of oak unbowed, unbroke,
A flash of colors fair.

SO, even at Manila, that deathless morn of May,
This banner streamed unstricken above the stricken bay.
And so at Santiago, Guasimas and San Juan
We set this beacon forward, where Valor urged us on,
And we raised o'er the town
As the conquered flag came down
This silken sign of peace benign,
Of progress and renown.

SO let us bear this standard, in battles yet to be,
Unstained above our columns, the cohorts of the free,
Nor ever loot and conquest inflame our fighting youth,
But only may they marshal for Justice and for Truth.
And heed, Columbia, heed!
By thy martyrs' blood I plead,
Lest thou profane this flag for gain
And shame its stars for deed.

TRIBUTE TO THE SIGNERS.

By ADLAI E. STEVENSON

FROM a Fourth of July address by the Hon. Adlai E. Stevenson, former vice president of the United States, the following vivid appreciation of the signers of the Declaration of Independence is taken:

Let us turn for a moment to the Continental congress assembled in Independence hall in Philadelphia on the Fourth day of July, 1776. One act of insult and oppression upon the part of the crown toward the colonies had followed another in rapid succession. At last the time had come when the representatives of the colonies were to decide in favor of abject submission to tyranny or to resolve to be forever free and independent. Upon the one side were the ties of country and a common ancestry, upon the other rebellion against the mother country and the commencement of a struggle the end of which no man could foretell; upon the one side unqualified submission to the dogma of the "divine right of kings," upon the other war with the greatest nation of the globe, with independence as the prize of victory and with defeat as surely the forerunner of infamy and death.

The men who signed this Declaration were not unmindful of the grave responsibilities which they assumed. It was no rash act upon their part. They well knew that Great Britain would never permit these colonies to be wrested from her grasp without a struggle. They well knew England, with her untold wealth, her powerful army and a navy that made her mistress of the seas, was a foe to be respected even by the strongest government upon the earth. To the imperishable honor of the signers of this Declaration be it said that they did not hesitate when the dread issues of that

The gospel of universal liberty had been proclaimed to the world. For ages mankind had believed there was "a divinity which doth hedge a king." The world was now startled from its lethargy by the declaration that "resistance to tyrants is obedience to God." The new gospel proclaimed by the signers of the Declaration of Independence was in conflict with that by which the world for generations had been governed. Boldly and unequivocally it challenged the doctrine of the divine right of kings. The barons of England at the point of the sword had wrested from an unwilling tyrant that Magna Charta which for ages had been the palladium of English liberty. Again and again during the reign of the long line of the predecessors of George III, some darling of prerogative of kingly power had been grudgingly conceded to an exasperated people. But these were mere efforts to restrain within bounds, not to destroy, the one man power.

Our Declaration of Independence solemnly announced as a self evident truth that all men are born equal. It proclaims as the cardinal feature of the social compact, as the very cornerstone of civil government, the absolute equality of all men. Governments were declared to have been established among men for the benefit of the governed. What a glorious inheritance is this Declaration! What lofty statesmanship is breathed in its every utterance! Well did the great commoner of England exclaim, "The men who can so write deserve to be free."

Whence came the men who signed this Declaration? In what school of politics or philosophy did they learn these great truths? Who taught them the science of political government? From what loyal line of lawgivers did they spring? Unskilled in the diplomacy and craft that control cabinets and govern empires, they were the people raised up by an all wise Providence to overcome the obstacles and grapple with the dangers that threatened their liberties.

From the earliest struggles for the freedom of mankind to the days of Thomas Jefferson the men who in the halls of debate or on the field of battle have been the eloquent advocates of human rights or the bold defenders of human liberty have sprung from the ranks of the people.

Fellow citizens, the calm dignity with which this Revolution was inaugurated, the ties of allegiance sundered, the solemn declaration made that henceforth these colonies were to be free and independent states and the solemn appeal of the representatives of the people to posterity for the rectitude of their intentions is one of the grandest and most imposing events in history. When in all time have any other people inaugurated revolution and confronted death with such fearless dignity? No bravado or violence marred the grandeur of this great act, but a calm recital of wrongs and oppressions is followed by the decisive step and the solemn appeal to the Supreme Judge of the world.

How striking the contrast with other nations when in the throes of revolution! The history of the rebellion in England which preceded the commonwealth is marred by the violent disruption of the parliament and the execution of Charles I. The oppression and wrong of the French people at the close of the eighteenth century culminated in the scenes of violence that caused Paris to run with blood, and the mob that ruled the hour threw down at the foot of the throne the head of a king as its gage of battle.

RECIPE FOR A QUIET FOURTH.

By TOMMY TUCKER.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

IT'S the Fourth of July, and
I simply can't keep
As quiet as when I'm in bed and asleep.
If I didn't do things to stir up a riot
They'd call in the doctor 'cause I was so quiet.
I don't see why folks should object to the noise
Of my cannons and crackers and all the rest of my toys.

WHEN THE CANNONS AND CRACKERS GO "BOOM!"

Why, when they had battles
There must have been more
Than we can turn out of the rattle and roar.
Besides, when the cannons and crackers go "boom"
There's one way to make it as still as the tomb—
Just stick in your fingers and stop up your ears.
It can't be a noise when there's nobody hears.

A PEACEFUL PATRIOT.

By ALLEN ARTHUR.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

I BELIEVE in the creed of the Scriptures—
The gospel o' good will an' peace.
That swords should be turned into plowshares
An' the 'warrin' o' nations should cease.
But when comes the Fourth with its mem'ries
O' victories grand, I opine
That's one day at least when I'm takin'
A little gunpowder in mine.

A LITTLE GUNPOWDER IN MINE.

To slaughter your brother 's fearful,
My spirit revolts at the thought.
'Tis better to practice the lessons
That in the good gospel are taught.
But if I had 'a' been with those patriots
Whose names now in history shine
I feel that I, too, 'd have taken
A little gunpowder in mine.
I know we've the grandest old nation
That's set in the earth's diadem.
Our fathers secured it by fightin'
(I wish I'd 'a' been 'long with them).
I'm peaceful an' ain't no ambition
Among the world's warriors to shine.
But I'm ready to take, if its needful,
A little gunpowder in mine.

NO FUND FOR FOURTH.

By ROBERT DONNELL.

"THE' ain't a-goin' to be no Fourth celebratin' at Slocum's Slough this year," said Uncle Si Slocum at the grocery store while he was unloading a big farm wagon cargo of fresh vegetables, berries and other good things to eat which he was selling to the grocer for cash.

"Why's that, Uncle Si?" asked the grocery clerk. "I was thinkin' o' comin' out myself an' celebratin' 'long with your three boys an' the Brown boys an' Henry Hillers. I know they burn up lots o' fireworks every Fourth."

"Yep," said Uncle Si, "but this Fourth it's a-goin' to be different. The great American eagle will have to flap his wings some'eres else this time, I reckon, an' jest let Slocum's Slough be lonesome-like."

"What's the trouble?"

"Money's too skeerce," replied Uncle Si, pocketing $49.85 which he had received for his load of produce. One of those fine, large yellow fellows, a hundred dollar bill, disclosed itself to the clerk's view when Mr. Slocum opened his pocketbook.

"Why, your crops seem to be fine, Mr. Slocum," said the clerk, "an' I s'posed prosperity was sittin' on every fence rail around these parts, singin' siren songs o' cheer, so to speak."

"The' ain't no famine, that's a fact," Uncle Si returned, "but all the same cash is too skeerce down 't the Slough fer the boys to celebrate proper."

"Paid off your mortgage last year, didn't you?"

"Yep, an' bought the eighty acres o' bottom land right south o' me too. But prices o' things is terrible high this year, you know."

"That may be," said the clerk, "but we're payin' you terrible high prices fer your produce, Mr. Slocum. I cert'nly can't just figger out how 'tis the' ain't no money for fireworks in your neighborhood."

"Well, then, sence you ask me, I'll tell you, young feller. You see, my three boys an' the two Brown boys an' Henry Hillers is all a-goin' off t' college this nex' September."

"Oh, I see—got to save up their money fer books an' board an' tuition."

"Well, not zackly that, fer us old folks pays them bills. Them boys is all powerful ambitious t' git 'long well in college an' shine bright in the public eye."

"Want to take special courses in Greek or somethin', I reckon?"

"Well, no; but they've all got t'gether an' agreed t' save up their Fourth o' July 'lowance to buy football clo'es an' cigarette cases."

Yes, by George!

Now let the imperial eagle screech, the soaring orator start his speech; throughout the land from beach to beach the bands begin to play.

The liberty of which you've heard we bought with blood from George the Third, and still it is no empty word, whatever croakers say.

Though here and there a tiny rift appears in freedom's birthday gift, it's lasted down to George the Fift'—and so hooray, hooray!

RUSSELL SHERMAN.

He Was an Excellent Scholar, but Not Especially Manly.

By OLIVE EDNA MAY.

(Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association.)

Russell Sherman led his class at the normal school. He was a hardworking student, spending all his surplus time in odd jobs by which he could pay his way while obtaining an education. He roomed alone, having no intimate associates and taking no part in the athletic games of his fellow students. "I like Sherman," said Tom Blake, one of the students, "but he's almost too delicately organized for a boy and has all the sensitiveness of a girl. I caught him crying one day when some one said something to him to hurt his feelings. Think of a fellow fifteen years old crying!"

One day Blake while walking across the campus saw Sherman shrinking away from Jim Potter, a bigger boy, who was following him up with clinched fists. Tom hurried on and heard Potter hiss between his teeth:

THIS TIME IT WAS A CAKE.

"Sissy!"

"What's the matter between you two?" asked Blake.

"None of your business," said Potter.

"What is it, Russell?"

"He sits next me in mathematics and wanted me to 'pony' him this morning at recitation. I couldn't. The teacher was looking straight at us."

"You lie!" said Potter.

"Russell, instead of answering the insult with a blow, shrank back. His face was scarlet, and his eyes were wet.

"I wouldn't stand that if I were you, Russell," said Blake. "It's better to get thrashed than to take the lie."

"I don't want to fight any one," replied Russell in a trembling voice. "I only want to be let alone."

"Well, take that for a parting gift," said Potter, and he slapped Sherman's face.

Blake, who had been curbing his indignation, could no longer stand this bullying of the strong over the weak. Making a rush for Potter, he tried to strike him, but Potter was too quick for him and, avoiding the blow, planted its mate on his cheek. A number of boys just out from recitation saw the fracas and, running forward, surrounded the combatants.

"A ring, a ring!"

Blake and Potter stripped to the waist.

"What's it about?" asked one of the boys.

"He's fighting for Sissy Sherman," said Potter.

The eyes of all were turned toward Sherman, who was vainly endeavoring to repress tears. He started to go away; then, as if ashamed to leave a fight that was on his account, he turned back and stood on the outer edge of the circle.

The combatants were between sixteen and seventeen years old. Potter was heavier than Blake, who was rather tall and slender. Blake had the advantage of a good cause, while Potter soon learned that he was without the sympathy of the spectators. Russell Sherman, though not physically strong or manly, was respected as the head of his class, and the head of the class is class property to be treated and respected as such. Therefore Blake, who was defending Sherman, was considered to be fighting for the honor of the class. Besides this, many of the boys had been bullied by Potter, and they would be glad to see him downed.

Half a dozen rounds had been fought when Blake, just as Potter was aiming a well directed blow at him, slipped and fell. Potter fell with him and, getting his knee on him, began to hammer him with his fist, when Sherman rushed at him, seized him by the hair and pulled him over. Some of the larger boys interfered, and the combatants got up. Then, after a brief rest, they began another round.

Stories of schoolboy fights usually give a victory for one or the other of the fighters, but in most cases they continue till both are tired out. Such was the case in the battle between Blake and Potter. About the time the spectators were thinking of stopping the fight a teacher was seen in the distance coming toward the scene of the struggle, and in another minute not a boy was to be seen on the campus.

After this Russell Sherman kept to himself more than ever. If that could be. He had the respect of his fellow students in everything except pluck. He was not considered manly—that is, so far as fighting his way was concerned—but with the decline of the old military spirit that for centuries gave first place to the strongest and bravest respect for brute strength has dwindled. Sherman had brains, and the preeminence of brains over muscle is fully recognized in the twentieth century. But he possessed a certain kind of pluck that no other boy in the school displayed. He was the only boy there who was earning his own education.

The day after the fight Tom Blake saw Russell Sherman coming across the campus toward him, but Sherman when he reached a fork in the cement walk turned aside, going in another direction. Blake saw plainly that the boy he had fought for shrank from meeting him. At first he didn't like this action on the part of his protege. He thought that Sherman should have come up to him frankly and thanked him for standing by him so far as to fight for it. But Blake was a thinking sort of a boy, and it occurred to him that if the tables were turned, if some boy bigger and stronger than he had fought for him, how would he feel toward that other boy? He could not quite put himself in such a position, for he had good strength for his age and was not fearful. Nevertheless he could excuse Sherman on the ground that he had needed protection from a bigger boy, had secured it and would naturally feel demeaned by accepting it.

Blake went on to his room and, glancing at his study table, saw something on it, flat and round, wrapped in white paper. Taking off the cover, he came to some oil paper, which contained something soft. Removing this wrapper, he uncovered a pie.

"By Jove!" he exclaimed. "I wonder how that came here."

He ate half the pie, then bethought himself who had left it there. Numerous inquiries failed to elicit the donor. He racked his brains to discover what friend he had that would thus favor him, but could not think of any one. One person occurred to him as the possible giver—that was Russell Sherman. But the pie had been tied up with a very narrow blue silk ribbon instead of a string, the ends being tied in a bow. Blake knew that no boy would ever tie up anything with a bow. No; some of his aunts, sisters, or cousins must have sent it to him.

He thought that when he met Sherman again he would say something to make him feel easier about his position. He found an opportunity one day when coming out of recitation.

"Hello, Russell!" he said.

"Hello, Blake!" was the reply.

"Going to win the valedictory?"

"I don't know."

"I hope you will."

"Why?"

"Oh, I think you're a pretty good sort of a fellow!"

"I don't believe you respect me much."

"Yes, I do. Why do you think I don't?"

"Oh, I don't fight my own battles!"

"You would with boys of your size."

"I haven't had a chance before this to thank you for that fight you had with Potter. It was mighty good of you."

Blake felt Russell's hand feeling for his and saw a pair of grateful eyes turned upon him. Thinking the affair was getting mawkish, he made pretense of wishing to catch up with another boy and ran away. When he went to his room to prepare for supper he saw another gift on his table. This time it was a cake.

Again Blake questioned the maids and others in the house, but no one could, or, rather, would, tell him who had left the gift.

Meanwhile Russell Sherman was distinguishing himself in his classes, continually gaining honors.

Graduation day came, and the boys made their speeches. Last came Sherman with the valedictory. He had fulfilled the expectations of his teachers, his standing being higher than had ever been reached in the school before. As soon as he started to speak persons in the audience began to whisper to each other: "How young he is! His voice hasn't even changed." The boy acquitted himself well and received more enthusiastic congratulations than are usual on such occasions. The world admires strength, but loves weakness.

The graduating class separated. Some to go the next autumn to college, others into business. During the summer Tom Blake went to a farmhouse where boarders were taken. On ascending the steps he saw a girl in a white dress dart into the house. He thought nothing of this, however, till supper time, when he saw the same girl sitting at an opposite table and trying to hide her face from him. After supper he met her in the hall. He stopped her and asked:

"I beg pardon. Aren't you a sister of Russell Sherman?"

"I am Russell Sherman."

And then it all came out that Edith Russell Sherman, having been denied admission to the normal school, had donned boy's apparel and entered as a boy. As soon as she had been graduated she returned to the dress of her own sex.

Tom Blake and Edith Sherman are now studying at a co-ed college. It looks as if they would study in proximity for the rest of their lives.

PICTURES OF THE KINGDOM.

Matthew 13:31-33; 44-52.—July 3.

"The Kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost."—Romans 14:17.

LET us keep in memory that the Master's parables of the Kingdom of Heaven relate to the class of people whom he is calling out of the world of mankind to be associated with him in his Millennial Kingdom soon to be inaugurated. Let us remember that sometimes this class is spoken of as including, nominally, not merely the saintly, the wheat class, but also, to some extent, the tares, as shown in our study of last week. These different parable-pictures represent the same subject from different standpoints, just as we take a photograph of a building from the north, the south, the east and the west, internally and externally.

As a mustard seed is very small, yet produces a large bush, so that the fowls of the air may lodge in its branches, so this illustrates how the gospel of the Kingdom would, from a small beginning, attain to a considerable size. The mustard would not be great among the trees, but great among bushes or herbage. Thus the message of Christ received at first only by the poor and the few of Israel, has finally grown to such important dimensions that the fowls like to gather in its branches. But let us remember that the fowls, according to our Lord's interpretation of a previous parable, represent the servants of the Wicked One. So then the teaching of this parable would lead us to conclude that the Church of Christ, at one time, was so unimportant in the world that it was a shame and a dishonor to belong to it, but that ultimately it would become honorable and great and the Adversary's servants would have pleasure in its shade. This development the Scriptures represent as being Babylon, declaring that, as a whole, with the various branches and denominations, the nominal Church of Christ is Babylonish. Hearken to the Lord's words: "She has become the hold of every foul spirit and the cage of every unclean and hateful bird." (Revelation 18:2.) The intimation is that there is a large outward development of the Church which is not to her advantage and glory but contrariwise. Nevertheless, this is, nominally, the Church of Christ. However his spirit may have been misrepresented and there may have been an improper development, ultimately the great Head of the Church will bring order out of chaos and confusion and will glorify and use his "elect."

The parable of the "leaven" (v. 33) illustrates the process by which, as was foretold, the Church would get into the wrong condition. As a woman would take her batch of flour for baking and put leaven (yeast) in it and the result would be that the mass would become leavened, so it would be with the Church of Christ; the food of the entire household would become leavened or corrupted. Every portion would become more or less vitiated with the leaven of false doctrines, which would permeate the entire mass. Thus today nearly every doctrine inculcated by Jesus and his Apostles has become more or less perverted or twisted by the errors of the dark ages.

The desirability of obtaining joint-heirship with Christ in his Millennial Kingdom, is pictured in the parable of "the treasure hidden in the field." The finder, realizing its value, desired it for himself and had such faith in it that he disposed of all of his property in order to buy that field, which he believed to contain the precious treasure. Only those who will appreciate the Gospel message will gain its glorious promises. If we love the present life with its joys and prospects, its hopes and ambitions, then we will labor for these, but if we intelligently hear and, by faith, believe the Gospel offer of this age of a share with Christ in his Millennial Kingdom, then in proportion to our faith and appreciation will be our self-sacrificing zeal to attain that prize. Whoever believes the message of the Kingdom will find his faith an inspiration, indeed a necessary inspiration, to the attainment of the prize, for it will cost all that he has of earthly blessings; and unless he has faith that he will find the prize, he will surely be unwilling to sacrifice all he has for it. The field belongs to God. He has put the treasure there. He offers it for sale to any willing to pay the price. The buyer is the Lord and those who accept his invitation to join with him in the sacrifice of their earthly interests that they may be sharers with him in his heavenly glories—in the work of the Millennial Age, to unearth all that treasure in the blessing of the world of mankind. The hiding of the treasure is necessary; as our Lord said, "Cast not your pearls before swine;" they will not understand you, they will think you foolish, and in their disappointment may do you injury. "Hast thou faith, have it to thyself before God." Make your sacrifice of earthly things to him and he who seeth in secret will reward you openly.

Pearls were much more in vogue in ancient times than now. Pearl buyers traded in these gems and carried them to the market, where they were highly estimated. The parable represents one of these pearl merchants as coming across the finest pearl he had ever seen. He considered it so priceless that he was quite rejoiced to sell or trade all of his other pearls and property, that he might become the owner of that pearl.

This parable represents the Gospel offer of a share with Christ in his Kingdom as being superior to all other propositions in the world. The honors of the world, of name and fame, position and wealth, are indeed desirable; as the Scriptures say, "A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches;" but when our eyes behold "the pearl of great price," the Kingdom offer of joint-heirship with our Lord Jesus in his heavenly glory and the association with him in his work of blessing all the families of the earth, we realize that this is a priceless thing, worth more by far than all the honors and dignities and pleasures of the world. Those worthy to buy this pearl will gladly exchange all earthly things therefor—even their good name, and this will be necessary, as the Master forewarned them, saying, "They shall say all manner of evil against you falsely for my sake; rejoice and be exceeding glad, for great is your reward in heaven, for so persecuted they the prophets who were before you." (Matthew 5:11, 12.) He that is not willing to have the Kingdom at such a cost is not worthy of the Kingdom. The Apostle has said, "Through much tribulation must we enter the Kingdom" (Acts 14:22); and only those who willingly endure such tribulations for righteousness' sake—for the sake of the truth, in obedience to the Heavenly calling—are overcomers. And only to the "overcomers" has the Lord given "the exceeding great and precious promises." "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne." —Rev. 3:21.

Another parable of the Kingdom represents the gospel message as a "net." Only one kind of fish is desired, but the net gathers every kind. Not every kind will inherit the Kingdom as joint-heirs with Christ Jesus, hence the end of this age will be a sifting, separating time, as represented in the parable. The desirable fish will be gathered into vessels; the remainder will be cast back into the sea as unfit for the Kingdom, but not necessarily unfit for any purpose. During Christ's Millennial reign that class unfit for the Kingdom will be dealt with and blessed and, if possible, made useful and fit for eternal life.

Here, as in the parable of the wheat and the tares, the furnace of fire, and the weeping and gnashing of teeth in connection therewith, symbolizes the great time of trouble with which this age will end, giving place to the Millennial Kingdom, the Kingdom for the establishment of which upon the earth the Church has been praying so unceasingly for nineteen centuries, "Thy Kingdom come; thy will be done on earth, as it is done in heaven." What a Kingdom that will be! It will be a Kingdom entrusted to a "Little Flock"—"Fear not, little flock, it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the Kingdom"—and it will be fully empowered to establish the rule of heaven among mankind!

Our study closes with the Lord's exhortation that all who are instructed respecting the things pertaining to the Kingdom should set their affairs in order.

ELIJAH AMES

One of Tecumseh's oldest and honored citizens passed away at his home in Brownville on Thursday, June 24, 1910 aged 86 years and three months.

He was born at Port Byron, Cayuga Co., N. Y., April 18 1824. Elijah Ames was married to Mary Sadler of that place, December 1st 1849.

After 53 years of happy married life she died, April 26 1902. Mr. and Mrs. Ames came to Tecumseh in 1853 for a visit, and afterwards returned to Tecumseh in 1855 for a permanent home.

Mr. Ames was a cooper by trade and worked at various times for the different millers of this place until he started a business of his own in 1873.

He was a member of the village council for 19 years and was always an advocate of any measure that was for the improvement and benefit of the community.

Mr. Ames became a member of Tecumseh Lodge, No. 69, F. & A. M. on April 28 1854.

He lived a long, honored and useful life and was respected by every one in the community and will be sincerely missed by many but especially so by the daughter who so tenderly care for him.

The funeral was held at the home last Sunday afternoon conducted by the Rev. D. S. Shaw. He was buried in Brookside with Masonic honors, conducted by the lodge who gave tribute to his worth.

"My child was burned terribly about the face, neck and cheek. I applied Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil. The pain ceased and the child sank into a restful sleep."—Mrs. Nancy M. Hanson, Hamburg, N. Y.

THE OCCIDENT AND ORIENT UNITE

In Buffalo Bill's Wild West and Pawnee Bill's Far East Which Comes to

Adrian, Mich., July 11.

The interesting announcement is made that Buffalo Bill's Wild West and Pawnee Bill's Far East will exhibit as indicated above. A remarkable event is announced in the leave-taking from public life of the old scout Buffalo Bill," who is making a last bow to each city he now visits—a valedictory. It is further stated that arrangements have been made with officials of the railroads to run reduced rate excursions on that date, thus affording to visit the exhibition at a minimum of expense. Two vast enterprises are now allied under one management. The union of Buffalo Bill's Wild West with Pawnee Bill's Far East brings together two great factors in out-of-door entertainment. While of course the general style of the combined entertainment remains the same as when they were separate units in public amusement there will be many features entirely new to this style of exhibition. The far East contingent will be represented in an Oriental spectacle of great beauty and splendor; introducing many picturesque types which inhabit the romantic East. In this scene and as a particular feature, Rossi's Musical Elephants, imported at an expense of $1,000 per week, will introduce their remarkable exhibition; playing various musical instruments, dancing, and in other manners evidencing their remarkable sagacity and wonderful training. In the Wild West section, Col. Wm. F. Cody, the last of the great scouts, will appear in the saddle at every performance, leading his Congress of Roughriders in some remarkable exhibition of expert horsemanship. The chief scenic feature will be the Battle of Summit Springs, a reproduction of one of the deciding conflicts in Indian warfare; a battle in which Col. Cody participated and in which he shot and killed Chief Tall Bull. In A Holiday at "T-E" Ranch will be pictured the pleasures and pastimes of the plainsman, cowboy sports and a dance upon the green. The contrast to this scene of peaceful revelry will be shown in a sudden attack by Indians. Many new features have been added to make Col. Cody's final visit one to be remembered as an honest tribute to a long career of honest effort.

"THE BIGGEST LITTLE TOWN" BEATEN

Fate Of A Town That Went Dry

Tekonsha, the little Calhoun county burg of 600 inhabitants, now claims the honor of being the driest town in the world. It is minus a river.

At the last session of the legislature the saloons were wiped out by law. Now the water wagon has been wiped out.

It was supposed the saloon question has been settled for all time. The fact is that there is yet trouble between the "wets" and the "drys." Tekonsha has one of the finest main streets of any town of its size in the land, but it is dry, dry, dry. In years past a sprinkler wet the main thoroughfare during the dry season. It was the custom of the merchants to chip in and defray the expenses of having the street sprinkled. This year it is different. The "wets" refused to chip in. They say if the "drys" want the town dry let them have it dry. As a result the water wagon has gone dry and the street is dry with two inches of dust upon it, for it is not paved. Every passing wind picks up the dust and whirls it into the eyes of the people. It blows into the stores when the doors are left open, and the merchants cannot place vegetables out doors.

The "drys" however, have one consolation: The "wets" must endure the dirt along with them; so there you are.

FEATURES OF THE NEW POSTAL SAVINGS BANK LAW

Some of the features of the postal savings bank law are:

Children over 10 years old may open acconnts.

Married women may have accounts in their own names and free from control or interference from their husbands.

No one will be allowed to deposit more than $100 in any one calender month.

The balance to the creditor of any person shall not exceed $500, exclusive of accumulated interest,

Interest of 2 per cent per annum will be paid on all deposits, but no interest will be allowed on fractions of a $1.

Plans with respect to putting the postal savings bank system into operation will be discussed at the last meeting of the season of the cabinet with President Taft in Washington.

A meeting of the board of trustees consisting of the Postmaster General, Secretary of the Treasury and Attorney General, designated under the law for the control, supervision and administration of the postal savings depositories, will meet and map out a systematic programe.

While no time is to be lost in arranging preliminaries, it is not thought feasible, according to a statement of Postmaster General Hitchcock, to establish depositories for several months The Postmaster General said that the board would go over the matter in a general way at its meeting outlining plans for organization and adopting regulations under which the business is to be conducted.

The Postmaster General has appointed a committee of departmental officer to prepare such blank forms and instructions as will be needed in getting the system started. The postal administrations of all foreign countries which have postal savings banks have been requested by the department to submit samples of their blank forms and copies of their regulations and instructions.

The above clipped frem the Chicago Record Herald is of much interest. And if taken up by the young will be of lasting benefit. It is so easy to spend the pennies, but when they amount to dollars each one will be glad to know that they have a bank account started and will feel encouraged to keep on saving. As soon as arrangements are completed they will be made known.

Beth Satterthwaite returned home Wednesday night from West Town near Philadelphia, Pa., where she has been attending college for the past year.

There was quite a crowd out Wednesday evening to meet and shake hand with the Hon. Chas. Townsend. He was kept busy for awhile explaining political situation.

Those from out of town who attended the funeral of the late Elijah Ames were Maurice McGary and wife of Jackson, Merritt and Bert Howard of Tekonsha and S. W. Saddler of Owosso.

Save cooking. Our line of cooked meat—cold roast beef, cold roast pork boiled ham, pressed ham, minced hem pressed meat, dried beef, bolonga, pickled pig feet, etc.
Miller & Clark, phone 158.

Some ten or twelve couple of the young people of Tecumseh are to celebrate the 4th by a picnic on the island in the Quaker Mill pond. They will have breakfast, dinner and supper there and expect to have a fine time.

Mrs. Wm. McCowan passed away Wednesday morning has been feeble for some time and never fully recovered from the shock of falling down the stairs a week ago. The funeral will be held at the house this afternoon at 2 o'clock with burial at Brookside.

FOURTH OF JULY

HOW THE DAY WAS FIRST CELEBRATED IN LENAWEE

Lenawee county's first settlers reached the site of Tecumseh in 1824, and in 1826 the citizens of that town, fairly bustin' with patriotism and enthusiasm brought along from York state, organized a celebration. A historian tells interestingly of the event:

"For several days prior to July 4th arrangements were made for an extensive celebration. About noon a procession formed at Brown's Tavern. Daniel Pittman was marshal of the day and rode on a small bald-faced pony. Brass bands were not plenty in those days, out music of some kind was necessary, so they got a French fiddler from Monroe, and that Frenchman with his fiddle constituted the band.

"After forming the procession, it was marched to Evans' new house, three blocks up Chicago street, where the exercises were held. During the march one string of the Frenchman's fiddle broke, and the band cried out 'Stop the procession!" The marshal however, kept the procession moving, but the music after that was rather demoralized. Arriving at Evan's house the speaking of the day was gone through with and then the company dispersed. Some of the men returned to Brown's Tavern for their dinner and others with ladies of the village made some tables in Pittman's yard and enjoyed a picnic dinner. Mrs. Brown had some cake and biscuit there made from new flour ground that morning."—Adrian Times.

PICNIC 4TH OF JULY

Remember the picnic on the 4th of July at the standpipe park and make it a regular old fashioned time.

Bring your basket full of picnic dainties and join with your neighbors for a fine spread. Swing in the swings lie in the hammocks, spread your blankets on the grass and take life easy and be independent for this is independance day and every one should celebrate in a rousing patriotic manner. Don't forget or let the young forget what this day means in our history. Come to the picnic everybody.

Just 84 years ago the first 4th of July was celebrated on the same grounds which gives added interest to the occasion. We hope no one will fail to be with us. Bring a few dishes and a tablecloth and anything you think will help the cause along.

WHO IS MUSSELMAN?

Plain Facts About the Man Who Aspires to Become Governor.

Amos S. Musselman of Grand Rapids, Kent county, is a candidate for governor of Michigan.

If not the leading candidate, his strength is growing at a rate astonishing to his friends, annoying to his opponents.

He is a successful man, who from the position of clerk in a wholesale tea and coffee house in 1876 rose to the head of the National Grocery company, the biggest institution of its kind in Michigan, and which he himself organized.

Upon announcing his candidacy for governor, he resigned the presidency of that company in order to be free to devote his time to his campaign, and, in case of his election, not to be hampered by business cares or alliances, and thus be in shape to devote his time and energies to the duties of the office of governor.

Amos S. Musselman was born of sturdy old Dutch stock twelve years before Lee invaded Pennsylvania and fought the great battle of Gettysburg. During the battle the boy could smell the smoke and hear the roar of the artillery. A few days later he tramped over the battlefield, and but a few months later still, when the battlefield was dedicated a national cemetery, he stood by the speakers' stand while Lincoln delivered his immortal address.

What Sort of a Man Is Musselman?

Amos S. Musselman is first and foremost a business man. He is a business man of the highest type—conservative, far-seeing, careful, accurate, square-dealing, honest with all. But he is unlike many successful business men, especially those at the head of big concerns and with great masses of detail to handle. Amos Musselman has a private office, but that private office is a misnomer so far as privacy is concerned. There is about him and his office none of the aristocrat. If you want to see him it is not necessary to send a card nor to have yourself announced. No matter how much he may be rushed with business the door is always open, the visitor is always welcome. The visitor will find him seated in the far corner of his office with an unlighted cigar—he enjoys a dry smoke—stuck in the corner of his mouth, dictating to a stenographer who sits at her desk. If he is in the act of dictating a letter, he will invite you to be seated until he has finished that one letter. You may hear it all. His business, like his life, is no secret. There are no dark spots to cover up. He trusts in the honesty of the caller not to peddle any business matter he may hear dictated, for he believes in the honor of mankind.

In his private life he is quiet and home loving. He owns a handsome country residence in East Grand Rapids, a home always open to his employes and to his friends. He loves his horse and almost daily in the summer time may be seen enjoying a gallop on his handsome black charger on which he presents a fine figure of a horseman.

What Does He Stand For?

1.—The governor shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed.

2.—The application of sound business methods and principles to the affairs of the state.

3.—The encouragement of outside capital to develop the resources of Michigan.

4.—The careful but sane and reasonable safeguarding of the rights of the people in dealing with corporations of all kinds.

5.—State supervision of private banking institutions to the end that the depositors shall have every protection thrown about their bank accounts.

6.—That kind of prison labor which shall interfere least with free labor while at the same time making the wrongdoer contribute toward his keeping, all working to the end of uplifting rather than demoralizing the man punished for his offense.

7.—Whatever revision of the system of taxation of mining and other corporations as shall cause them to pay a just proportion of the state taxes.

8.—The encouragement of the temperance movement.

9.—Encouragement of the home rule principle along all lines, and especially in the matter of local option, but not at the present time statewide prohibition.

10.—The strict enforcement of the law in counties which have voted favorably upon local option.

11.—Civil service rules and regulations for all employes of the state.

12.—An absolutely square deal for all classes, all interests and all people, politics being entirely eliminated from all consideration.

Word of Warning.

Daughter—This piano is really my very own, isn't it, pa?

Pa—Yes, my dear.

"And when I marry I can take it with me, can I?"

"Certainly, my child. But don't tell any one; it might spoil your chances."

Not Enthusiastic.

"We're going to send your town a graphophone to speak on political topics next Thursday night, and we want some prominent citizens on the platform."

"All right," responded the citizen addressed, "we'll provide a few wooden Indians for a background."

No Love Lost.

"I suppose," said the fan on the homeward-bound car, "that you are a lover of the national game?"

"Not me," replied the stranger occupying the adjoining seat. "I'm one of the umpires."

Sample Helps Frail Women

So many women are dragging out weary lives just because their digestive organs are weak. The result is poor circulation, nervousness and the verge of invalidism. It is often very unnecessary and the woman's own fault.

The first thing to do is to look to the welfare of your bowels. There the trouble usually lies. All physicians know that a large percentage of women are habitually constipated, and from this results indigestion, piles, weariness, etc., that women constantly complain of. But there is no use taking "female remedies" and things of that kind until you have started your bowels to moving. You will find that when the bowels move regularly once or twice a day all your petty ills will disappear. Take a good, mild laxative tonic like Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin for awhile and you will find yourself rapidly getting better and stronger, your bowels will regulate themselves and work at stated times, and then your headaches and dizziness will disappear. Don't take strong cathartic pills or salts, but just such a mild and pleasant-tasting remedy as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin.

You can obtain a bottle of your druggist for fifty cents or one dollar, and either size may be enough to permanently cure you. This exhibition of home products will be one of the largest displays of the kind, including an automobile show, a food fair, a machinery display, a furniture exhibit, an electrical show and other lines. It will be a rare opportunity to see "what makes Detroit

On the river front a spacious garden will be a charming and unique feature, enhanced by floral decorations and brilliant electrical illuminations. Two concert bands will give afternoon and evening musical programs, playing simultaneously in different parts of the Exposition grounds.

WILLIAM M. SMITH.

William M. Smith of St. Johns, candidate for the Republican nomination as attorney general, has been prominent in state politics for a number of years. He is a resident of St Johns and has several times filled the office of city attorney. He was a presidential elector at large in 1904 and is also a member of the Republican state central committee from the Eighth congressional district.

He attracted state-wide attention at the Republican state convention in the spring of 1909, when, in his speech as chairman of the convention, he for the first time voiced insurgency feeling which is now so rife in the state. In a speech which electrified his audience and brought the delegates to their feet, he declared that the Republican party should purge itself of evils which had grown up within it in the state and predicted a loss of power if this was not done. Mr. Smith predicted conditions would be as they are today in Michigan.

Pels to measure the potatoes in and haul them off the field to cellar or market. How any one can find time in the busy digging season to measure potatoes in bushel baskets is past understanding. It's job enough to keep account of 100 or 200 barrels a day. One New York farmer told about taking out 40 to 50 bushel crates to the field each day to pick in, while we take out 50 to over 100 barrels a day to fill each day. Last fall it didn't take a very big crew to pick 100 barrels a day.

Effect of Prohibition.

"How did prohibition work in your country?" "First rate," answered Col. Stillwell. "The health of the community has improved. Since the accepted remedy is not available there is not near so much chills and fever."

Some Tecumseh People Fully Realize It Now

When the back aches from kidney ills.

When urinary troubles annoy you.

There's a certain way to find relief;

A sure way to be cured.

Doan's Kidney Pills will do it.

Tecumseh people endorse this claim.

Mrs. Jeanett Teachout, N. Oneida street, Tecumseh, Mich., says: "I again take pleasure in recommending Doan's Kidney Pills to persons afflicted with kidney trouble. Last fall my kidneys became disordered and I suffered from pains in the small of my back. If I stooped sharp twinges seized me and for a few seconds I was unable to straighten. Too frequent passages of kidney secretions also annoyed me greatly and the doctor was unable to help me. Doan's Kidney Pills were so highly spoken of that I procured a box and began their use. I was so promptly relieved that I continued taking the remedy until my trouble had disappeared."

IRRIGATION IN DRY REGIONS

Wonders that the Artesian Well Has Wrought in Texas.

The soaring prices of land in the great corn-growing states are making it impossible for young men to get a footing alongside of the old home places, and they are driven in every direction searching for something cheaper, writes "Grapho" in the Chicago Advance. That there are hundreds of millions of acres of land still unoccupied everybody knows who travels westward or southward. But there is a barrier to the southward of these lands. It is a rainless sky. That eternal blue above forbids the green below. No water, no farmer. This seemed a truism which would stand as long in the future as it had in the past.

But now comes the apostle of dry farming, who declares that a new epoch is at hand, that the earth is about to cut loose from the sky, and go it alone. This apostle was at the dry farming congress, recently held in El Paso, Tex., and in a glowing speech said: "The great western plains country is now the mecca for hundreds of thousands of people annually and they are settling down on the vast expanse traversed in former years by the buffalo and the Indians and are making crops from soil that was looked upon as unfit even for the burial of a dead Indian. This same soil is now yielding wheat, oats, corn, forage of all varieties, beans, pumpkins and other vegetables innumerable, and even watermelons. Yes, watermelons such as Georgia herself would be proud to produce and on 10 inches and less of rainfall; it sounds like fairy talk, but it is backed by the proof."

There is nothing dry about this, it makes one's mouth water to think of these melons. And I have observed in traveling that when a man wants to tell a big story about the wonderful yield of a dry country he always gets around to a watermelon patch. Out in New Mexico last winter a man on the train said to me, "I sold $60 worth of watermelons off a piece of land not bigger than a postage stamp." Perhaps it was a little larger, but it was a big story. If that "dry farming congress" meets again 10 years from now some member may be expected to tell a story about like this: "One Sunday our pastor preached the dryest sermon that I think I ever heard, but after dinner I took the sermon out into the garden and spread it over one of the beds and that evening we had watermelons for supper. I know this sounds like fairy talk, but it is backed by the proof. A half dozen of the neighbor boys who broke into the melon patch that night will swear to it."

With the fairies outdone, what can the rest of us do but swallow these stories, if not the watermelons. But I may be permitted to say that I have traveled across New Mexico, Arizona and California and back again across Nevada and Utah and Wyoming; and I have gone down through that desolation between San Antonio, Tex., and Laredo, and over those long, long stretches of high plain and plateau to Mexico City, and I have never seen any successful farming which was not backed up by water. It may have been there, but it did not show up to the naked eye. I have seen dry fields of corn in which the poor little stalks looked sick unto death, and the man and the wife and the children and the dogs in the wretched little houses on these farms looked thin and hungry and starved. I have passed for hours across plains where it was cactus and more cactus and bigger cactus until I loathed the sight of cactus. There was only one thing more disagreeable and that was the Spanish dagger. I have also crossed those long stretches of desolation in southern Utah and western Colorado, where even the cactus does not attempt to do business. On a bright and beautiful day not a spear of grass was visible, not a fly was in the air or even a spider web in sight. It was just blue sky above, bare earth beneath and nothing between except the passing train.

If these desolate regions can be made to raise watermelons while you wait or crops of grain and hay while the season passes, it will be one of the greatest achievements of modern days. Truly it will introduce a new epoch. The man who makes two blades of grass grow where one grew before is a benefactor, as we all have heard, but how much greater the benefactor who makes everything grow where nothing grew before, and who turns these millions and hundreds of millions of waste lands into teeming fields! My best wishes are with the dry farming congress, but not with the promoter who is trying to sell dry land to green purchasers.

What I did see on the run from San Antonio to Laredo was irrigation by means of artesian wells. The wells furnished a constant flow of water, which is conducted through the fields on sloping hillsides or plains. The principal crop is these fields is onions and the same is true of the fields at Laredo, which is irrigated by water [illegible] the Rio Grande. The onion does not make so big a story as the watermelon, but it comes into market earlier, stays longer and makes more money. The strip of country in which the artesian well is made to do irrigating is not wide.

What I heard was that the country around Corpus Christi and Brownsville, Tex., has been made remarkably productive by means of irrigation. Men who had been there for a year or two experimenting, were on the train with their families whom they were taking to their new homes. They were quite enthusiastic over the land down by the sea, with its never fading summer and its two or three crops a year. Much money has been made in that region, both by those who raised early vegetables and by speculators who raised the prices. But there has been still greater progress in some of the western states. Idaho is making land reclamation its principal business, and it claims to have doubled its population within seven years. Irrigation schemes calling for an outlay of $7,000,000 are now under way. In Nevada the general government will spend $9,000,000 on the Truckee-Carson irrigation project, and that state is expecting more money from its now barren lands than from its rich gold mines.

I also heard, while in the Southwest that the cactus, in spite of its porcupine quills and needle points, is being subdued and utilized in feeding cattle. Cows are said to give an astonishing amount of milk when fed on a mixture of bran and cactus. So that, with the enterprise of the farmer and the genius of a Burbank, these regions of cactus and desolation may yet be made to flow with milk and honey. And then America will surely be the greatest country that ever a flag floated over or echoed to the praise of the orator, the poet and the promoter.

SOILING FOR MILK PRODUCTION.

Often a farmer is so situated that he must raise soiling crops for profitable milk production. An authority in the New York Tribune Farmer points out that the earliest green food available in the spring is rye. This should be ready, he says, by the middle of May, and is good for from 10 days to two weeks, allowing you begin to cut just as the heads are forming. After the stalks begin to joint it gets hard and woody very fast. This is to be followed by wheat, which is better and will last longer, but will not give so much food. Of course this would have had to be put in last fall. These should be sown the last of August or first of September in rich land at the rate of 2½ bushels to the acre of the rye and two of the wheat.

The earliest crop to put in this spring is Canada peas and oats. Plant as soon as the ground is fit some of the earlier varities of sweet corn. They will be ready by the first of August; and, while they will not give so great bulk, they afford fine feed. Sow barley and millet—about a peck to the acre—at the same time you put in the corn. Follow this corn with two or three other plantings of Evergreen Sweet up to July 1. If the rye or wheat was at hand the land they occupied can be planted to corn. The oat and pea ground can be sowed with millet as late as the middle of July. Often a late sowing of oats and peas can be put in after the sweet corn is off in early August and they will give a good cutting before frost in an ordinary season in rich ground. Don't fail to plant a goodly number of pumpkins. They will give succulent food well into December if you house them from frost long after every other green thing is gone.

Where alfalfa can be grown it is second to none, and will give at least two cuttings a year without labor of reseeding. Aside from the alfalfa, which is the best, and the pumpkins, which are the poorest, there is not much difference in the food value of all the forages named if they are equally mature. At the Pan-American exposition we were surprised to find the above true, and we know exactly just what each one produced on the different forages given. This writer believes it will pay any one depending on soiling to have a summer silo. On account of adverse conditions there will sometimes be a break in the rotation of summer crops, and the silage is like the widow's cruse of oil. Again, we found at Buffalo that silage—and that not the best—was cheaper to produce milk at $2 a ton than the best of all the green foods at $1.75 a ton.

IN FAVOR OF HAWKS AND OWLS

Does it pay the farmers to protect hawks and owls? Any farmer who has studied the habits of these birds will admit that it does, according to J. W. Franzin of the Minneapolis public library museum, in Farm, Stock and Home. Of all the hawks and owls of eastern North America only the coopers and sharp-shinned hawk and the great horned owl can be said to be more harmful than useful. Hawks and owls are the natural enemies of gophers, field mice and other harmful rodents, which, if left unchecked, would increase in such numbers as to make farming unprofitable if not impossible. These birds are also great destroyers of grasshoppers, locusts and other insects. What are farmers doing to protect these birds? As a general rule they are not shot on sight. Truly a signal reward for their services.

In 1885 an act was passed in the state of Pennsylvania known as the scalp act, a bounty of 50 cents was offered for each hawk and owl killed within the state. The state paid out bounty on over 100,000 birds. The farmers were satisfied that the chicken killers were destroyed. About two years later the gophers, field mice and noxious insects appeared in such numbers that the farmers were powerless to deal with them. The result of this foolish act was that the farmers suffered a loss of nearly $4,000,000 in a year and a half. Dr. Fisher of Washington has found that 90 per cent of the food of the red-shouldered hawk, commonly called chicken-hawk, consists of injurious mammals and insects; while 200 castings of the barn owl contained the skulls of 454 small mammals, no less than 225 of these being skulls of destructive field or meadow mice.

No hawk or owl should be killed without being first given a fair trial. It may only be a certain individual that is killing chickens. If this one is found guilty and shot it will generally be all that is needed. One should not condemn the whole tribe

An old millionaire refused point-blank to lend $50 to a bosom friend. "Well, I did not expect that of you," said the would-be borrower, rising and preparing to leave indignantly. "I will never forgive you for this refusal." "Of course, you won't, my dear fellow," replied the old screw, with the utmost calmness; "but if I'd lent you the $50 you wouldn't have paid me, and we should have quarreled about that; so it's as well to get the row over at once. CHARLES E. TOWNSEND.

Was born on a farm in Jackson county fifty-three years ago. His parents were pioneers and experienced all the hardships of pioneer life. Young Townsend earned his own schooling, and got a place as a school teacher, finally becoming principal of the Parma schools. He became interested in county politics and was elected register of deeds five times. While teaching school and acting as register, he studied law and was admitted to the bar, becoming a member of one of the leading law firms of Jackson. He was Jackson county's candidate in the congressional convention in 1902 and was nominated on the 801st ballot. He was elected and is now serving his fourth term. He soon became prominent in railroad rate legislation and was recognized as the friend and confident of Roosevelt. He was selected by President Taft to handle the rate bill during the present session and has been active in constructing some of the most important legislation ever enacted for the nation. He is a candidate for United States senator on a progressive platform and will make a thorough canvass of the state as soon as congress adjourns.

Absent Minded.

Col. Charley Coey, the president of the American Federation of Aero Clubs, is credited with this story of an aeronautical pilot:

"He is really too absent-minded to pilot a balloon. He used, you know, to be a railroad conductor, but he had to give up the work; he was too absent-minded for it, too.

"On his train one day, as he passed through the cars taking up the tickets, a joking passenger, instead of proffering his pasteboard, solemnly proffered his forefinger.

"Never noticing anything out of the way, the conductor punched a little chunk out of the side of the finger and passed on."

RECORD CROWD TO ATTEND BIG FIGHT

Sports at Reno Awaits the Sound of the Gong.

BOTH MEN PRONOUNCED FIT

Betting Continues to Make Jeffries a Somewhat Warm Favorite—Rickard Hopes Receipts Will Be $200,000.

Reno, July 4.—With the appointment of the time keeper the list of ringside officials for the big battle between Jeffries and Johnson was completed. The officials are: Referee, Tex Rickard of Nevada; alternate referee, Charles White of New York; timekeeper, George F. Harting of San Francisco; announcer, Billy Jourdan of San Francisco; stakeholder, "Big Tim" Sullivan of New York; betting commissioner, Tom Corbett of San Francisco.

Reno is surging with strangers and excitement, and the big fighters are ready for the ring to settle the question of the minute.

Both Jim Jeffries, retired champion, and Jack Johnson, present champion of the world, had last brief workouts but they were more in the nature of limbering up stunts than anything else, and meant nothing more than that.

The fighters have finished and must stand or fall on what they already have done. It is officially announced that both camps that all training has ended, and that both fighters are fit to enter the ring.

The betting continues to make Jeffries a somewhat warm favorite, and the play at from 100 to 70 and 65 is liberal enough to justify the opinion that there will be thousands and thousands of dollars in the pool boxes and in the hands of stakeholders before the men come together.

The sale of seats continues to be heavy, but both the promoters fear now that they will have to depend upon their profits from the moving pictures to clear themselves for the eight months of work they have put in on the affair.

It will be necessary to take in $150,000 for Gleason and Rickard to get even for what they have and will spend and just about that amount of coin is in sight now. Rickard has an idea that the receipts will top $200,000, but Gleason does not think so.

Almost every former champion and most of the present day stars are in the city to see the big fight.

BATTLE TODAY FOR FORTUNE

Interesting Facts With Regard to Sum Each Will Get by Victory.

Reno, July 4.—The following facts in connection with the financial profit that will accrue to the winner, are most interesting:

The purse of $101,000 is the greatest prize that was ever striven for by two pugilists. It is to be split 75 to 25. The man who stands while Referee Tex Rickard lifts a counting finger ten times over the one who falls, will receive $75,750, the beaten one will have to content himself with a paltry $25,250, but there's a sum that must be added to this purse money right away. When articles of agreement were signed between Jeff and Johnson a bonus of $10,000 was given to each by the promoters. It is pretty generally understood that each fighter promptly put this money as a side bet on himself.

Consider then just what immediate prize money will be Jeffries if he suhold win and no prophesy is attempted here: First, there is $74,750 of the purse, add to that $20,000 representing his bonus and his winnning of Johnson's bonus. That makes $95,750 actually in the hands of the Los Angeles man at the second that he sees his opponent counted out.

But there is more to be piled up against this. Jeffries and Rickard have jointly sold their rights in the moving picture enterprise on the basis of two-thirds to one-third. The total sum paid them was $100,000. Of this $66,666 is already the property of James J. Jeffries, win or lose, boost the assets of Jeffries winner up to $162,416. Still there is more to come. After Jeff had signed articles to meet the negro he took a little swing around the vaudeville circuit because such exercise would have a healthy effect on his bank account. It is generally understood that by punching the bag and skipping the rope before openmouthed audiences the ex-boilermaker netted himself a tidy little sum of $62,000. Still figuring on the basis of Jeff winning will whip these ciphers into line and take a squint at the grand total. Here it is, it is $224,416.

Not quite so accurate an estimate of the coin to be brought home can be made in the event of Johnson defending his title of world's champion. In the first place there would be $75,750 purse. Add to that the lump $20,000 side bet. That's $95,750, the same as in the case of Jeff. Now Johnson has sold his fight in the moving pictures for $70,000. He has that coin in his pocket whether the pictures net their owners much or not. So there's $145,000 to the account of Jack Arthur Johnson if he knocks out Mr. Jeffries.

There are to be 124 actual working reporters at the ring side today and each will handle stories of at least 5,000 words.

After he fled from the asylum he walked nearly 400 miles during the three weeks preceding his arrival here—his old home—and covered parts of Iowa, Illinois, Missouri and Wisconsin.

In an interview given out here he comments on recent experiments in the dropping of bombs onto a target resembling a modern war vessel. Incidentally the inventor declared the helicopter to be the flying machine of the future.

"The experiments are interesting and give us an insight into some of the big problems which must be solved by the aeroplane inventors," said Mr. Edison.

"A method of making the aim of the operator more exact should not be difficult to devise. I do not think that a gun should be the ideal plan. I believe, rather, that some way should be invented by which the missile would be released down a tube as soon as the object to be hit had been sighted and the aim properly regulated.

"On the other hand the question arises as to the destructive efficiency of such a bomb if it actually struck the deck of a heavily armored battleship. Simply striking the deck would not, to my mind, do any tremendous damage unless a special explosive were used. Experiments along this line will now be in order.

"Another thing: The aeroplane is very delicately poised in the air. Traveling at great speed, its ability to remain in the air is dependent solely on the maintenance of the speed and equipoise. I cannot help thinking that the dropping of a missile weighing, say, twenty-five pounds, unless managed with the greatest care, which again might tend to offset accuracy of aim, would seriously jeopardize the equilibrium of the plane.

"But I am absolutely convinced that the future of flying lies in the perfection of the helicopter machine, which will not be under any such handicap.

Efforts of Chicago Tenement People to Keep Cool.

Chicago, July 4.—A drop in temperature from 92 to 80 did not come in time to check the roll of dead from the heat.

Ten persons died in twenty-four hours from the long continued battle, and many others, weakened physically by the torrid temperature, may succumb before the hot wave spends its force.

The night in the tenement districts saw beds in many instances on the sidewalks.

TAFT AND TEDDY FORM ALLIANCE

TAFT TO TOUR MIDDLE WEST

Roosevelt Also Will Aid in Campaign of Henry Cabot Lodge for Re-Election—Teddy Acts the Role of Peacemaker.

Beverly, Mass., July 4. — President Taft and Col. Roosevelt are in perfect accord. Between them there is an understanding, not expressed perhaps, but tacit. Between them they will play out the great game that is to end only at the polls next November and that will result in a Republican or a Democratic house of representatives and that may indicate the way in which another election in 1912 may go. As to the ultimate outcome of that game they both agree. The house must go Republican.

It was admitted after the conference between the president and Col. Roosevelt at the Evans cottage on Burgess Point, that politics had entered but little into the conversation. At the tea party on the portico of the little cottage that looks out over Salem bay, they did talk politics and of the fight that is coming next fall. Probably before that time the colonel had let Mr. Taft know something of his ideas. He wrote from London, it will be remembered, to President Taft a friendly intimate letter. Many men since then have seen the colonel who talked afterwards with the presidept.

He began the leading of the insurgents months ago. Gifford Pinchot crossed the seas to speak with him and pour into his ear the tale of troubles and woe. So did Senator Root, who is not an insurgent. Senator LaFollette, the radical, who out Heroded Herod, called at Oyster Bay and came away smiling, calling the hunter "the greatest living American." Victor Murdock, the vigorous Kansas, with the sunflower hair, Judge Madison of Kansas, and Senator Bristow were there on Sundays.

According to politicians here Mr. Roosevelt will continue to receive insurgents. He will continue to send them away happy and he will go ahead working for the Republican party. Even if it were possible that Mr. Roosevelt intended to take the nomination for the presidency in 1912, provided he could get it, or in 1916, as some believe, he would not be likely to split the party now. Any announcement from him that he did not approve of Mr. Taft's administration would mean a break in the ranks such as that party has not suffered in many many years. It would mean certain defeat in November and possibly later it would mean New York lost to the party Ohio swept away, Indiana, now uncertain, over in the Democratic ranks, and altogether a blow which would work irremedial injury.

Mr. Taft let be known that he intended to make a trip through the middle west in October. It was to last ten days, and friends said would be devoted partly, at least, to a defense of his administration. The colonel, it has been announced, is coming back to Massachusetts to help Senator Henry Cabot Lodge in his fight to retain the toga against the ambition of Representative Butler Ames.

The president is going to do some direct campaigning in Ohio. This announcement was made semi-officially. In his home state he takes an active interest.

FAITHFUL AWAIT COMING OF LORD

Sect Prepare For the End of the World In Duxbury, Mass.

BAND NUMBERS ABOUT A DOZEN

Stock House With Food, Abandon All Business and Refuse to Pay Attention to Appeals to Return to Usual Pursuits.

Springfield, Mass., July 4.—Gathered in a spacious house in the select residential section of this city, a little band of about a dozen men and women are awaiting the coming of the Lord. Marcus M. Goodell, a prosperous business man, in whose house they are waiting, has abandoned all his earthly business. Edward, Alfred and Irving, his sons, who were in business with him, have done likewise and the two men with families refuse to heed the appeals of their wives and friends to give up this worship and return to their homes.

Although the time set for the coming of the Lord by one of the prophets of the sect in Duxbury has passed, this Pentacostal band has not wavered in its faith, simply replying to scoffers that the prophet, being human, erred in trying to set the time, but that the Lord will come in his own good time.

Members of the sect have chistened the Goodell house "the Ark." They say that in it they will safely pass through the great cataclysm that will attend the second coming of the Lord, as Noah passed through the flood.

They are prepared for the long wait, having stocked the cellar with large quantities of provisions of all kinds. Besides this they have dug an artesian well 300 feet deep at a cost of $1,500 in the yard just back of "The Ark" to have a supply of pure water, for they maintain that if they used the water supplied by the city they have become contaminated by wordly things and thus become unfit for the elect.

An effort was made recently to get Edward Elliot, of this city, out of the house by legal methods. His wife, whom he left almost penniless with seven children when he entered "The Ark" went to the house repeatedly and begged him to go home, but he refused. Some of her friends then tried to get a warrant for his arrest on the charge of non-support, but this plan failed because the band has sent her $30.

Who Shot The Arrow?

It Offered a Poor Boy an Education Anonymously

By MARY A. BOWERS

Copyrighted, 1910, by American Press Association.

Humphrey Miller was lying on the grass one July afternoon in the center of the square about which clustered the village of Atherton. Humphrey was a typical case of a boy born to the plow who yearned for something better, at least more intellectual. He wished to go to college and study a profession. He was ready to work his way while studying, but just as he was about to matriculate his father died, the farm was sold out under a mortgage, and the boy's mother and sister were thrown upon him for support. To bear this burden and his own as a student appeared to him a matter of sheer impossibility. He must forego his projects, accept a situation offered him in a country store and go to work.

He was about to arise and walk to a corner of the square where the store in question was located to announce that he would begin his duties the next morning when he heard a whizzing sound and saw a short distance from him an arrow standing with its point imbedded in the ground. To the feathered end hung a bit of paper, which, now that the arrow was at rest, floated idly in the wind. Humphrey arose, went to the arrow, broke the string that held the paper and found the following words written in pencil:

Go to college. Your mother and sister will be provided for.

Humphrey swept with his eye the square and the houses that lined it. The former was empty; the latter showed no sign of the person who had shot the arrow. They were mostly dwellings, and Humphrey knew nearly all of the people who lived in them. He began at once to con over those among whom the mysterious archer might be found. There was Peter Owens, a friend of his father, who was well to do, but Mr. Owens was not a man to hide a charity under a bushel. There was Harvey Dixon, his mother's cousin, but Dixon had all he could do to provide for his own family. There was his intimate friend, Bob Clark, who had been left a legacy by his grandmother. Humphrey knew that Bob when he was younger had been fond of archery. Besides, Bob's sister Lucina had shown by her actions that she admired Humphrey. Had not Lucina something to do with the matter?

Humphrey thought all the rest of the day about the proposed benefaction and in the evening went to see Rose Wyman, a girl in whose judgment he had great confidence, intending to ask her to find out for him who had shot the arrow. Rose did not live on the square and, having no means, could not possibly have had anything to do with the message. He told her of the circumstance and that he could not accept the favor without knowing the donor and agreeing to repay in time the amount expended upon him. Would she help him?

Rose always took time to consider before reaching her decisions. Finally she said:

"If the person who shot the arrow wished to be known he or she would not have taken that means of communicating. To endeavor to discover the donor would be ungrateful in you. My advice to you is to accept the gift as it is offered."

"You've got a lot of horse sense in that head of yours, Rose," was the reply. "I'll take your advice."

Humphrey left her, wondering how a girl no older than himself could have so much foresight. Relying upon her judgment, he acted on her advice, went to college that autumn, rang the college bell for his tuition, did all sorts of odd jobs and in his third and fourth year taught school. Besides this, he read the first books used by students of law.

The promise of his unknown friend to provide for his mother and sister was kept, but the amounts provided were small and at times irregularly paid. Humphrey, remembering Rose's words that it would be ungrateful for him to endeavor to discover who was the donor, told his mother not to look into any checks she might receive and if any came that revealed the secret not to tell him. The remittances were all made by check, signed by the cashier of the Atherton bank. But, obeying her son's instructions, Mrs. Miller never inquired at the bank from whom the money came, though it was not probable if she had done so she would have received any satisfaction.

But the one clew Humphrey possessed as to the identity of the unknown donor—the fact that Bob Clark had been fond of archery when a boy—took possession of the student's mind and kept its place there all through his college course. Attached to the clew was a feeling which kept him in a state of constant perplexity. What if Lucina Clark had persuaded her father to advance the means sent his mother? That Lucina had shown a predisposition for him was evident. At the end of his studies it was to be expected that the secret would come out. If Lucina had been instrumental in the matter it would be incumbent upon him to bestow upon her any return she might desire. Suppose she should wish the offer of himself!

Lucina was an attractive girl, and such a result did not appear especially distasteful to him. Indeed, the association of her with this (to him) great benefaction was gradually drawing him toward her during the whole of his college course. Each year he was growing older and at the time of his graduation had attained the season when one begins to think of his domestic future. His thoughts during this period were all of Lucina Clark.

While in college Humphrey took one or two scholarships which brought him pecuniary assistance, but beyond this he had too much on his hands to study for prizes or honors in his class. At the time of his graduation nearly all his friends at Atherton, including Lucina Clark, went over to attend the exercises at the college. Rose Wyman had become the principal of a school for small children, and the exercises of her own pupils prevented her from seeing her friend graduate.

Humphrey had studied enough law while in college to enable him to get a situation in an office that would pay him a meager salary and give him such a legal education as may be obtained from office practice. Therefore he did not attend a law school. He preferred to stop the payments of his unknown friend. He therefore directed his mother to return the first payment made after he began his duties and ask the cashier of the bank from which it came if he might not now know to whom he had been indebted. The cashier after taking time for consultation with his principal returned and answered that whenever he felt abundantly able to repay the amount the donor's name would be given him. Until then there could be nothing gained by furnishing the desired information.

Humphrey was much disappointed. He thought of charging Bob Clark with being a party to the matter of his benefactions; but, thinking that if his sister were involved without his knowledge it might raise a delicate complication, he desisted. Since the only clew he had was in connection with the Clark family there was no one else for him to consider. In his perplexity he remembered that he had been guided by Rose Wyman's judgment thus far and it would perhaps be better to take counsel with her before going any further.

Rose confirmed his idea that if Lucina Clark had had anything to do with the matter, should he speak to Bob, complications might arise. Indeed, Rose was of the opinion that if any woman had been the donor the situation might become very embarrassing. She advised Humphrey not to let the benefaction influence him in the matter of love. If he loved Lucina he should tell her so, shutting his eyes to the fact that she might have secured for him the assistance which had enabled him to obtain a college education. If he did not love her for herself without this (hypothetical) favor he should not propose to her on account of it.

Humphrey left his friend, having gained a new item of knowledge. He had spent four years at college and come home to learn that a girl with a common school education had more sense than he had. He felt like saying with the poet, "Knowledge comes, but wisdom lingers."

He made up his mind not to act in the matter without Rose's sanction. But he seriously considered offering himself to Lucina Clark. He believed that there were nine chances in ten that she was at least indirectly concerned in the matter, and if she were the whole would make a very pretty romance. But, not being sure of his love for her, he concluded to wait. It struck him, moreover, that he would not like to confess to the practical Rose that he was influenced by this supposed "pretty romance." He had come to dread Rose's unromantic way of looking at things. He thought that if she had only had a little of the ideal in her nature he might have considered her a sweetheart instead of a friend.

But Humphrey could not make up his mind that he loved Lucina Clark exclusive of the gratitude he felt for her supposed favor. One day he went to Rose and told her this. He also told her that he had borne the uncertainty attached to the secret long enough and it was time he was relieved of it. He also desired to commence to make small payments returning the amount he had received. To do this he must have the name of the donor and he had been told that it would at such time be proper for him to make inquiries to that end.

Rose considered awhile replying, then advised him that if such was his intention he might with propriety ask the cashier if he would reveal the secret. Humphrey was so delighted that he was about to go to the bank at once when Rose stopped him.

"You have plenty of time," she said. "I make it the rule of my life to sleep over important decisions whenever it is possible. Go tomorrow."

"Just like you, Rose," he exclaimed—"no impulse, no romance! But you make up the deficiency in mighty good sense."

Humphrey went to the bank next morning and asked for the name of his benefactor. He expected that the cashier would ask for time in which to get the consent of his principal. In this Humphrey was mistaken. He had already been authorized.

"Rosalie Wyman," was the reply.

Humphrey gaped at the man for a while and then without a word rushed out of the bank and did not stop till he found Rose.

"Rose," he said, "I would like to torture you and then burn you at the stake. How did you do it?"

"Worked and saved."

"Well, all I have to say to you is that if you have any use for a natural born fool there's one at your disposal."

"Think over it; there's plenty of time."

"Not one second."

"Well, then, there's been a long wait for me. I'm glad to have it over."

A SANE FOURTH.

Now, good friends, after having had a sane fourth, what do you think of it? As a loyal, true-hearted American do you feel that this day, which marks the birth of our national independence has been fittingly honored? Not even a morning salute to mark the dawning of another Fourth. No hand to thrill the hearts of the people. Even the eagle seemed to be muzzled lest he should offer a protest and make a bit of noise. A few with the love of country in their hearts flung forth its banner to the breeze, attesting like Barbara Fritchie that there were yet some loyal hearts. After reading the letter of John Adams as printed below, just ask yourselves if such a sane (?) Fourth as we have just passed is all our country deserves.

(Letter from John Adams, signer of the Declaration of Independence and third presiddnt of the United States, to his wife, July 3, 1776:)

"The second (4th) day of July, 1776, will be the most memorable epoch in the history of America. I am apt to believe that it will be celebrated by succeeding generations as the great anniversary festival. It ought to be commemorated as the day of deliverance by solemn acts of devotion to God Almighty. It ought to be solemnized with pomp and parade, with shows, games, sports, guns, bells, bonfires and illuminations from one end of the continent to the other, from this time forward for evermore."

JOHN ADAMS.

Mrs. Elizabeth McCowan

One by one we have to record the passing of the dear old friends of years, and now we mourn the loss of Mrs. McCowan who for so many years has been identified with the history of Tecumseh, and that of the Methodist Church. She was interested in the Church in all its relations and was a life long member of the missonary Society. Though she had long since passed her three score years and ten, yet her mind was as bright and her eyes had the same old sparkle of former years. To those who knew her best in the family circle, thought of her cheerful trustintg faith will be of great comfort in the long years that strech out before them.

After the darkness cometh the light
Daslight follows the dreary night,
Healen is only just over the way
And there forever is endless day.

The Picnic

There was a fine attendance at the picnic Monday afternoon and everyone seemed to enjoy the occosion. The picnic dinner was a great success and seemed to please the palate of the most fastidiour. The speech by Mr. Michner of Adrian was pronounced very fine indeed and sparkled with wit and pleasantries. Altogetner the picnic of the 4th of July may be pronounced as O. K.

WOMAN, LOVELY WOMAN

Her waist begins just below her neck. Her hips have been planed off even with the rest of her body. She is usually buttoned up the back, and around her neck she wears a section of barbed wire, covered with lace. She wears on her head a blond haystack of hair, and on top of this a central dome with rings about the same size as those of Saturn. She is swathed in her gown like an Indian papoose, and on the end of her feet are dabs of patent leather. She walks on stiltlike heels with the expertness of a tight-rope dancer. The pores of her skin are full of fine white powder.

This is a woman.

A merry party of young folks gathered at the home of Newton Satterthwaite Friday evening to welcome Miss Beth who has just returned from a year at school.

Mr. John Correy died at the home of his daughter Mrs. Chas. Underwood Sunday noon. Funeral Tuesday afternoon at 2, o'clock at the home, with burial at Ridgeway.

Mrs. John McIntyre and children and their Grandmother McIntyre visited Monday forenoon with Mrs John Cadmus Sr, After which some 12 14 met at the home of Sydney Cadmus and family for a 4th of July dinner. The day was most pleasantly spent and each one felt as night drew near that such gatherings were good and should be repeated often.

Mrs. Loa Russell who was in Adrian Friday on business met with a painful accident in stepping from the street car they made a sudden start and she struck the ground with such force as to break her leg just above the ankle. She was taken into Botsfords Hotel and later was taken to the home of her parents in Waldron.

E. C. Brown & Co., have purchased the old building known for so many years as the "Agricultaral works." And will move their extensive business into the new quarters as soon as some changes can be made, this move will give them more room and a better locality for business. We are glad to know the building will not stand empty through another season. And we bespeak for them a generous share of the business.

A Wonderful News Service

Have you ever paused to think what a marvelous organization must be necessary to lay before you each day an accurate account of the happenings of yesterday in Europe, Asia, Africa, South America, Australia, the islands of the sea and the whole expanse of our own coutinent, all in a single newspaper? The intricate net work of cables and telegraph lines, the complicated chain of news-gathering agencies stretching across the continents and oceans, the innumerable reporters working daily for you under tropic suns and over artic snows—have you ever felt the same romantic thrill of it all in reading a great modern newspaper such as The Chicago Record Herald? We mention this paper especially because of the completeness of its domestic and foreign news service. It has a correspondent in every town or city of importance in the United States, a veritable army of them in all. In addition it has the benefit of the foreign news service of the New York Herald, famous for its world-wide cable system and for the reliability of its foreign news; also that of the New York World and the New York Journal of Commerce, besides that of the great co-operative newsgatherers organization, the Associated Press. With such a vast and complete news service it is noo strange that the Record-Herald so easily holds its own as one of the great uewspapers of the world.

THE OCCIDENT AND ORIENT UNITE

In Buffalo Bill's Wild West and Pawnee Bill's Far East Which Comes to

Adrian, Mich., July 11.

The interesting announcement is made that Buffalo Bill's Wild West and Pawnee Bill's Far East will exhibit as indicated above. A remarkable event is announced in the leave-taking from public life of the old scout Buffalo Bill," who is making a last bow to each city he now visits—a valedictory. It is further stated that arrangements have been made with officials of the railroads to run reduced rate excursions on that date, thus affording to visit the exhibition at a minimum of expense. Two vast enterprises are now allied under one management. The union of Buffalo Bill's Wild West with Pawnee Bill's Far East brings together two great factors in out-of-door entertainment. While of course the general style of the combined entertainment remains the same as when they were separate units in public amusement there will be many features entirely new to this style of exhibition. The far East contingent will be represented in an Oriental spectacle of great beauty and splendor; introducing many picturesque types which inhabit the romantic East. In this scene and as a particular feature, Rossi's Musical Elephants, imported at an expense of $1,000 per week, will introduce their remarkable exhibition; playing various musical instruments, dancing, and in other manners evidencing their remarkable sagacity and wonderful training. In the Wild West section, Col. Wm. F. Cody, the last of the great scouts, will appear in the saddle at every performance, leading his Congress of Roughriders in some remarkable exhibition of expert horsemenship. The chief scenic feature will be the Battle of Summit Springs, a reproduction of one of the deciding conflicts in Indian warfare; a battle in which Col. Cody participated and in which he shot and killed Chief Tall Bull. In A Holiday at "T-E" Ranch will be pictured the pleasures and pastimes of the plainsman, cowboy sports and a dance upon the green. The contrast to this scene of peaceful revelry will be shown in a sudden attack by Indians. Many new features have been added to make Col. Cody's final visit one to be remembered as an honest tribute to a long career of honest effort.

INDIGESTION

Relief in Five Minutes and Permanent Cure or Money Back.

When C. A. Wright & Son state that they have a remedy that is guaranteed to cure any man or woman who suffers from food fermentation which causes belching, sour stomach, gas eructations, heartburn and that lump of lead feeling in the abdomen or money back what are the poor stomach sufferers in Tecumseh and vicinity going to do about it?

The name of the most remarkable stomach prescription is Mi-o-na. Most people call them Mi-o-na stomach tablets because they kuow that there is no remedy so good for indigestion or stomach disorders. Here is one opinion:

"I have been troubled with indigestion for more than a year. I bought one box of Mi-o-na and it cured me. Now I would not be without a box in the house for $50.00. It saves a lot of doctor bills when you can be cured for 50 cents.

You can use my name if you want to."—Arthur Sederquest, 6 Nichols St., Wakefield, Mass. Nov. 7, 1909.

Mi-o-na stomach tablets cost 50 cents a box at druggists everywhere and at C. A. Wright & Son's, Tecumseh.

PICTURESQUE SOUTH

A TRIP THROUGH THE COKE FIELDS AND SOUTHERN VIRGINIA

The old darkey in bidding me goodbye two years ago said, "You is shuah to come again; any one who has drunk tug rivah watah is shuah to come again"—but I must confess that I did not indulge in drinking tug water.

It is just two years since I last visited here and the mountains are as beautiful as I have pictured them in my dreams, with their green foliage and masses of pink laurel and rhododendrons. The grounds around my brother's bungalow have been wonderfully improved since my last visit and the dear old fashioned flowers were in evidence everywhere. He has made a specialty of roses, which grow in luxurious profusion.

But I will not linger here with a description of West Virginia as I gave a full account on my former visit, but rather let me describe a trip to the city of Roanoke in old Virginia, through the famous coke fields of West Virginia.

Taking the Norfolk & Western from Hensley, for 25 miles it is one continuous line of villages, with scarcely a break, each one named by the mine that owns it, Climbing the mountain until we reached a height of 3,500 feet, all this distance both sides of the track is lined with coke ovens. The coke is made from the slack and is in the oven 48 hours. At midnight this is the liviest spot on earth when the coke is taken out and broken up. We passed by the mines where occurred the terrible accidents of last year when 50 miners were killed, and in just two weeks to the day and hour 62 more were added to the dead. There and many, many accidents happening right along but statistics show that with the more modern appliances there is a great decrease over former years. There are many hospitals all through this section and everthing is done by the owners of the mines to help those who are injured.

The tunnel through which we passed at the top of the mountain was over a mile long and most of the way up grade. I breathed a sigh of relief when we reached daylight for we were nearly stuck in one place, though we had two engines to pull us through. The down grade was through the most beautiful valleys rich with verdure and the old homes with their broad porches inviting one to rest and quietude and now we arrive at the end of our trip—old Roanoke.

This city is situated in the southern part of Virginia in a broad valley surrounded by mountains over whose peaks hangs that blue haze referred to so often in song and story.

Hotel Roanoke, where we stopped, was one of the most picturesque buildings I ever saw, surrounded by the most magnificent grounds, whose hedges, fountains and flowers remind me of these lines of Tennyson:

"The splash and stir
Of fountains spouting up and showering down
In meches of the jasamine and the rose."

The building is covered with old Virginia creeper hanging in festoons from every peak and gable. The sloping grounds are divided by the closely clipped hedges and in the center of the hedges about every 12 feet rises an umbrella tree having the leaf ar the catalpa, with palms and flowers everywhere about the grounds

Imagine my delight when I opened my casement window in my room to find a beautiful magnolia tree laden with blossoms so waxlike, greeting me, and with the city lying below, the mountains in the distance, it was a sight never to be forgotten.

It is said that the southern lover when he wishes especially to honor his sweetheart, writes the story of his love on the petals of the magnolia blossom. (The least touch of a pen on its surface leaving a tracery of brown.)

Roanoke's name was originally Big Lick, it being one of the big licks frequented by the deer in its primitive state. There are two colleges for women here—Virginia and Hollins. Hollins, lying about 7 miles away, was founded in 1842, and has about 300 students.

The morning we started for Hollins in an auto was beautiful. The road was fine, owing to the fact that they use convict labor for road making instead of shoes, etc. The road followed a mountain creek that dashed and bubbled over the rocks. On each side of this stream, as we would grow willow trees, were catalpas, laden with flowers, leaning over and apparently admiring themselves in the clear mountain stream. I have been on the water in all sorts of crafts, but this was my first experience in trying to sail in an auto. Finding the bridge down, we tried to cross the stream and it was interesting to say the least.

Roanoke draws its water supplies from springs that apparently came right from the base of the tallest mountain and here we saw a beautiful sight. The side of the mountain seemed to have a carpet of pink blossoms. On closer inspection it proved to be pink ramblers that had been set out all along the base of the mountain and seemed as though they had sprung right from the grass.

Mountain Park is one of the sights, and with its many lights presents a lovely picture at night. There are many beautiful homes here, most of them having the large pillars in front. One of the funny sights on the street is to see an old darkey woman with a couple of live chickens in one hand and a large watermelon under the other arm.

It was with regret that we left the beautiful spot for our return trip. Again we passed through Dante's inferno which was in full blast. The bright flames, the deep shadows and the grimy forms of the men make a picture which will linger in our memory for many a day.

We reached Hensley in a drenching rain, and although we were on a fast train, the obliging conductor landed us at our own gate.

THE FLOWER SHOW.

Alicia Sayles was troubled. What troubled her was her own secret and was not suspected by anyone. Indeed, it was not suspected at all that she was troubled. Why should she so? She owned the finest farm in the county, was a college graduate and comely. True, she was an orphan, but as far back as she could remember she had always been an orphan. Her home was with an uncle and an aunt.

What troubled her was this. She had nearly passed what might be considered the best age for women to marry—she was 27 and was not married. Had it not been for her property she might have been married long ago. Nevertheless, Alicia was a country girl. If she married she would marry a farmer.

On her return from college she did not think of marriage. She had resources within herself which were greatly broadened by her education. For a time she read books on the lines marked out for her in college and was satisfied. But one morning she awoke to the fact that she was drifting into perpetual spinsterhood. The prospect did not please her. She thought over the bachelors of her acquaintance and after some deliberation settled on Silas Blakely, a young farmer with little on his farm except a mortgage. On him she resolved to bestow her hand.

She did not know that Blakely would care to marry her, though she rather thought he would. But, considering she was well to do and he was poor, she knew he would not have the assurance to propose to her. She must propose to him. How should she propose?

One evening Alicia saw Blakely coming up the road, driving the stock from pasture. Hurrying into the garden she gathered a bouquet and said to it:

"I take you, beautiful flowers, with your pink and blue and crimson and white complexions, to be my wedded husband."

Then, calling to her aunt, she told her to take them to the well and throw them in as soon as Blakely came opposite, making sure he saw her doing so. The aunt took the bouquet, went to the well and when the young farmer passed acted as she had been told.

"Why do you throw those beautiful flowers away?" called Silas.

"They are my husband," said Alicia from the porch. "I'm a widow."

"What do you mean by that?"

"Have you ever heard of the proverb, 'Go to the ant, thou sluggard—consider her days and be wise?'"

"Yes."

"Well, if you wish to know the meaning of my being married to the flowers, go to your books and if you hunt patiently you will find out."

With this she went into the house.

Blakely hurried on to overtake the stock which had passed during the brief dialogue, but he knew not of horses or cows; the strange episode had got into his head, and he was filled with wonder as to what it meant. While Alicia had been telling him that she was a widow she had looked upon him kindly, and her voice, which was sweet, still sounded pleasantly in his ears.

Now, Silas Blakely was no fool. His education was good for a countryman, but he neither had the books nor the inclination to hunt through them for any interpretation of such an inane proceeding. One of his schoolmates, however, had gone to college and had become a professor. To him Blakely wrote an account of the episode, asking for an interpretation.

Alicia possibly wished to test Silas' common sense.

It was a long while before he received the interpretation to the conundrum, but when it came he opened his eyes and his heart started up at a gait of a hundred beats to the minute. The same evening, getting off his farm clothes and into a very respectable outfit in which, by the way, he looked very well, he went to call on Alicia:

"I have come," he said, "to offer all I have—that is, my farm with a mortgage on it—for the flower widow."

"And how," she asked, blushing and smiling, "did you learn what is meant by a flower widow?"

Blakely told her of his application and showed her the reply, which was as follows:

"In India a man often remains unmarried longer than he would desire simply because he cannot afford to pay the sum the father of a desirable daughter demands of his would-be son-in-law. Widows, however, are cheap, and a wily father who finds his daughter is getting on in years while suitors tarry takes advantage of this fact. He marries his girl to a bunch of flowers, which he then throws into a well. Thus the lady becomes technically a widow, and as such she is a bargain in the marriage market. Thus the flower widow is secured as a wife by a suitor who would not have dared offer a small sum for her before her so-called marriage."

Alicia found in Silas Blakely the man she desired for a husband. He not only lifted the mortgage from his farm, but managed hers for her so that both prospered. Through her life Alicia was devoted to her husband and her children, and when the former died no flowers were thrown in the well. She remained a real widow.—F. A. Mitchel.

Pipe Dreams.

Up in the choir loft the row of painted angels which ornamented the apex of each organ pipe started down into the pit of frivolity below.

"Ah," gushed the tall soprano, as she gazed up at the remarkable looking seraphs, "aren't they dreams?"

"Yes," murmured the short tenor, as he disagreeably spurned with his foot the double pile of hymn books which he stood upon to secure the dignity of height, "but, like all other angels we know anything about, they are only pipe dreams."

Pat and the Ghost.

An Irishman was relating to some friends in London how one night on retiring to bed he fancied he saw a ghost, and having a gun ready at hand he fired at it. Next morning he examined the object he had fired at and discovered it was his own shirt.

"What did you do then?" exclaimed one of the company.

"Begorra," said Pat, "I just went down on my knees and thanked Providence I wasn't inside it, so I did."

Sample Helps Frail Women

So many women are dragging out weary lives just because their digestive organs are weak. The result is poor circulation, nervousness and the verge of invalidism. It is often very unnecessary and the woman's own fault.

The first thing to do is to look to the welfare of your bowels. There the trouble usually lies. All physicians know that a large percentage of women are habitually constipated, and from this results indigestion, piles, weariness, etc., that women constantly complain of. But there is no use taking "female remedies" and things of that kind until you have started your bowels to moving. You will find that when the bowels move regularly once or twice a day all your petty ills will disappear. Take a good, mild laxative tonic like Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin for awhile and you will find yourself rapidly getting better and stronger, your bowels will regulate themselves and work at stated times, and then your headaches and dizziness will disappear. Don't take strong cathartic pills or salts, but just such a mild and pleasant-tasting remedy as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin.

You can obtain a bottle of your druggist for fifty cents or one dollar, and either size may be enough to permanently cure you. Thousands of women keep it regularly in the house and will no longer be without it, as it cured them and can be used with safety by every member of the family, down to the youngest child, but if you have never used it take the advice of Mrs. Earl S. Cox, 409 Twenty-fifth street, Moline, Ill., and Mrs. Ellen Dungan, Muncie, Ind., and send to Dr. Caldwell for a free trial bottle, as they did, and learn for yourself what it will do in your own case. That it will cure you, as it did them, there is no doubt.

Dr. Caldwell personally will be pleased to give you any medical advice you may desire for yourself or family pertaining to the stomach, liver or bowels absolutely free of charge. Explain your case in a letter and he will reply to you in detail. For the free sample simply send your name and address on a postal card or otherwise. For either request the doctor's address is Dr. W. B. Caldwell, R.500 Caldwell building, Monticello, Ill.

FLYING NEAR WATER.

Daring exhibition given in one of the Wright brothers' aeroplanes over Long Island sound. This same machine will be used in the exhibition flights at the State Fair the week of Sept. 19-24th.

AS THE WRIGHT AEROPLANE WILL LOOK.

This gives a good idea of how the Wright aeroplanes to be seen at the State Fair, Sept. 19-24th, will appear. Recent improvements permit of much better handling of the airships than ever, and now circling a grand stand is a matter of easy achievement for the aviators. The aeroplanes will remain at all times in sight of the spectators. This will be the first appearance of the planes in Michigan.

Time Saver.

An old millionaire refused point-blank to lend $50 to a bosom friend. "Well, I did not expect that of you," said the would-be borrower, rising and preparing to leave indignantly. "I will never forgive you for this refusal," "Of course, you won't, my dear fellow," replied the old screw, with the utmost calmness; "but if I'd lent you the $50 you wouldn't have paid me, and we should have quarreled about that; so it's as well to get the row over at once. THE FORTUNE HUNTERS.

Raymond Riggs, a rich bachelor, finding the weather oppressive in the city, concluded to run down to the seashore. He found there a bevy of girls, the most of whom, having worn themselves out during the gay social season in town, were endeavoring to put the roses back into their cheeks under the influence of ocean breezes.

Raymond Riggs was a key to the wealth he possessed. All the girl had to do to unlock the door to it was to snare him. He had fought off a regiment of them during the previous season and had hoped for a rest at the seashore. He was doomed to disappointment. They attacked him by platoons and companies. To get rid of them he went off one day several miles up the beach and sat down on the sand. The waves rolled lazily in, broke on a bar and slid up on the sand with an effervescing sound. The sky was blue and cloudless. The ships out at sea sailed on as silently as if they were painted instead of real. It was all very restful and in marked contrast with being hunted down by a flock of—women, he should have said, but he preferred the word harpies.

A glass bottle was thrown up by the waves, rolled about on the sand and carried out. When it came up again Raymond noticed that it was corked. He seized it, took out the cork and with the blade of his knife managed to extricate through the narrow neck a card. On it was written in pale ink, "Aline Eliot." The address was given at a town a hundred miles down the coast, then followed, "Dear finder, I am lonely."

"For heaven's sake," exclaimed Raymond, "are all the women in the world hunting lovers? I escape from a flock of them back on the shore only to be met by an advance from the ocean."

But as he gazed at this singular contrivance for mating, as he regarded it, it seemed far different to him from the advances he had received from the fortune hunters. He fancied the writer to be some innocent girl who craved only to obey the instincts mother nature had planted in her pure bosom. Perhaps she had sat alone by the ocean as he was sitting, yielding to a natural inclination to mate, and had sent out her message with blind confidence that it would fall into the hands of the man who was destined to be all in all to her. Was this the explanation, or was she, too, hunting for a fortune? He would open a correspondence with her. In this way he could find out what he wished to know.

He inclosed the card with his own name and address and the words, "I too, am lonely." In a few days he received a letter. There was nothing in it about love or marriage. It was an unsophisticated epistle from a young girl about nothing. Raymond read between the lines. "Perhaps you are he for whom I intended my message." But it did not say, "You may be some rascal who will take a mean advantage of what I have done." What refreshing innocence! Fancy one of the fortune hunters reposing such confidence in the average man.

He thought he would send a picture of some man about his own age and ask hers in return, but the girl's guilelessness had affected him, and he shrank from such deception. Then confident that he could not be mistaken, he inclosed his photograph. As soon as he had done so the thought occurred to him that he was a fool. The danger of a society fortune hunter was nothing beside one he had never seen possessing letters from him and his photograph.

However, in exchange came a likeness. It was the likeness of one a painter would seize upon as a model for a Madonna. There was innocence personified. A pair of soft eyes looked out from an oval face. The lips were sensitive, and Raymond considered them especially kissable. He thought of the faces of the fortune hunters, restored to their natural appearance by cosmetics. There was none of them who would not consider herself flagrantly immodest to thus advertise for a husband. Yet here was the Madonna-like face looking at him with a modesty that none of these could have assumed.

One day Raymond was missed at the seashore. There was a flutter among the fortune hunters, for, though none of them had secured a foothold, every one hoped for herself, not for the others. Had he returned to the city? No. Inquiries elicited the fact that his baggage, like our flag was "still there." So they waited and watched and hoped. But Raymond did not return. In time he directed that his baggage be sent to the city, and neither the waves nor the gulls nor the ships nor the fortune hunters saw him more—at least n that summer.

But the next summer all these saw him again and saw a very different man. He was no longer pursued by the harpies, for his estate had been pre-empted. A slender, oval faced wife was with him, whose presence kept them all at a distance. They were willing to admit there was a certain placid beauty about her, though she had no style. But there was evidence that her figure was not built out or driven in. Indeed, she was as God, not dress, had made her.—Gertrude Gowan.

THE TEMPLE BELL.

A Mysterious Disappearance and the Explanation.

By CLARISSA MACKIE.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

Hedges and I toiled up the dry bed of Furnace creek and left Death valley.

"Hark!" said Hedges in a strange voice.

Across the hidden jagged ranges came a sweet musical echo. It was repeated again and yet again to my astounded ears.

"It's a bell," I almost screamed at him, "a bell here—a church bell in Death valley!"

With a choking cry Hedges melted from my side. I heard the stamping of his mule and then the sharp clatter of small hoofs among the stones.

"Come on!" he shouted back at me. "Once in India I heard it and"— His voice died away in the darkness, and when the sound of hoofs ceased altogether I was left alone with the intermittent sound of the bell.

I stood listening, listening, until at last my feet moved toward that spot in the gloom where my burro was picketed. I felt for and found the remaining bag of ore which Hedges had left to my share, and I flung it across the back of the beast with eager hands.

A great clearness was in my mind, and in my heart was a yearning pity for the poor—the poor of the world, at whose feet I longed to pour my sack of gold—and I hastened forward eager to give all that I had to charity.

The bell rang softly as I approached, and every chime fell straight on my pitying heart. A faint red glow was reflected on the rocks ahead, and around the bend of a huge bowlder I came upon the temple in the wilderness.

The red light came from the sanctuary lamp hanging within the tiny building. It tinged the gray rocks with a strange, unearthly coloring and gave to the white walls of the temple a delicate rosiness.

My knife ripped a hole in the canvas sack, and then, staggering because of its great weight, I lifted the gold and poured the precious lumps into the alms basin.

As the last lump of ore clanked into the basin the clearness in my head seemed to snap as if some one had struck me a sharp blow. I felt myself sinking, sinking to the marble floor. It seemed years before I felt its cooling touch on my cheek, and then all was dark.

* * * * * * *

When I awoke stars were shining out of a black sky, and I heard a hoarse whinny from the burro near by. I was lying on my back, and my temples throbbed dully.

The white temple had disappeared. My eager search among the rocks was unavailing.

Thus I found myself a beggar at the gate of Death valley.

I knew that Furnace Creek ranch was somewhere—it must be near, and without food and with only a small canteen of water I set forth on a journey that I knew must end in death.

The next day I met Hedges. He was riding slowly toward me with eyes fixed on the ground. Behind him trailed a pack mule. His bag of ore had disappeared.

"Medford!" he almost sobbed as I trudged painfully into view. He slipped from his mule and ran toward me with outstretched hands. "What is the matter, old man? Why didn't you follow me that night? I had to go. You see, I had heard the bell before!"

I stared at him from hopeless eyes, and he read the truth.

"You didn't—you followed the bell?" he stammered.

"Yes," I said thickly.

"And your gold—the ore?"

"I gave it—gave it to the poor of the world," I said bitterly. "I had to do it."

He nodded understandingly. "I will tell you my experience, Peter, after you have eaten. I have food here and materials for a fire. I will make some coffee."

"Where have you been?" I asked.

"I found the ranch. I left my sack there and loaded with food to return for you. Don't say another word until you have rested."

Late in the afternoon when the sun was drawing down behind the dark range Hedges told his story:

"Five years ago, before I met you, Medford, I traveled for a large dealer in precious stones. I went to Calcutta on the track of a pair of magnificent pigeon blood rubies, the property of a gambling maharajah, who was hard pressed by his creditors.

"These I bought, together with several other splendid stones, the combined value of which was $200,000.

"I walked into Calcutta from the maharajah's palace just as dusk was falling. Perhaps the pressure of my revolver against my breast gave me assurance, for it is a dark and lonely road, but there was a fascination in watching the flying of the red glowing twilight sunset and the coming of the velvet black darkness jeweled above with stars and pointed here and there with gleaming lights from scattered dwellings.

"I was crossing a bleak stretch of wild ground, rank with parched grass and weeds, when I first heard the temple bell—the same bell that you heard last night and from which I ran away.

"It seemed as if all the poor downtrodden, plague stricken natives of India called appealingly for alms. It mattered little that the jewels were not my own. I tore them from my belt with feverish impatience and threw them into the alms basin, and they disappeared. Then something happened, and I went down, down!

"When I regained consciousness I was still lying in the parched grass, and a pariah dog was licking my face. The stars shone overhead, but the temple was gone—marble walls and floor, luring bell—all gone!" Hedges buried his head in his hands and was very still.

"And what did you do?" I asked after a long silence.

"I raved like a madman," returned Hedges, lifting his head fiercely. "I ran into the city and found a man whom I knew, and he put great forces to work and discovered nothing. No one had seen or heard of such a temple, and they believed I had been drinking and been set upon by robbers.

"I would be breaking stone now if I had not had a rich relative who lent me the fortune to replace the stolen gems. I am repaying him now."

"Of course I am ruined," I said.

"Half of what I have is yours, Peter, and you can pay me back," he said quickly.

I held up my hand. "I couldn't, Hedges. You know I am grateful. I am engaged to marry Ethel Lambert, as you are aware. I have nothing but my profession, no capital whatever, and I made this journey down into hades for the gold to get a start. I have lost it and must begin again. I cannot ask her to wait much longer, and the professor'"—

"Is Professor Lambert a stiff on money?" demanded Hedges. "I thought him quite the other way, you know."

"He isn't a bit mercenary," I said hastily, "only I haven't got the face to take Ethel from her luxurious home into the poor quarters I can now afford, and so"—

"So you'll both be miserable forever after," interrupted Hedges dryly. "Let's go back to San Francisco and see Professor Lambert before you do anything desperate."

We resumed our journey the next day and several weeks afterward found me dressed once more in civilized garments, shaven and shorn, ringing the professor's doorbell. I did not ask for Ethel, though my eyes were aching to see her, and so I was taken through the house and into the long passageway that led to the laboratory.

Professor Lambert was a metallurgist. I found his gray head bent above some fragments of greenish metal on the table.

When he had warmly greeted me I told my unlikely story, knowing it was scarcely credible, yet when I had concluded the professor took me by the hand and led me into a back room.

Then he told me the story of how he had experimented with bell tones, hoping to carry out a theory of his own that some day he might produce a bell whose tones might find a response in human hearts. He hoped to attain a pitch of tone whose vibration might strike a chord of human sympathy in every heart, that the hearing of it might promote good fellowship and love and end in universal peace—a very pretty theory.

The one casting he had made had resulted in producing that strange bell whose call was to sacrifice, to give all in response to its command. Startled at the production and still uncertain as to its value, he was shocked to awake one morning and find that his assistant had disappeared and with him the bell.

Secretly he had pursued the man. His agents had trailed the thief from country to country, and even after I had fallen senseless in the little chapel and had been thrown into outer darkness by the adventurer the detectives had fallen upon the temple and carried it and the thief triumphantly to San Francisco and justice.

A train of burros carried the stage setting from place to place. Wherever men walked in solitary places with gold or silver or precious stones the temple might be found.

"Your gold ore is in that sack in the corner," concluded the professor, with a smile. "And now suppose you go down and see Ethel."

Eager as I was to meet my sweetheart, I waited long enough to telephone the strange story to Hedges, patiently waiting in the hotel to share his golden store with me, before I went to claim my happiness.

Ready to Operate.

"Oh, doctor," exclaimed the nervous young wife, as the eminent surgeon entered the sickroom, "if an operation is necessary we want you to operate immediately! Expense is no object at all."

"We will operate at once," replied the eminent surgeon, without looking at the patient.

Encouraging.

Art and the Money.

"An artist," said the man with pointed whiskers, must not think about money."

"I suppose not," answered Mr. Cumrox. "Every time I buy a picture the artist wants enough to keep him from thinking about money for the rest of his life."

Was a Sure Thing

"What's the old lady doing now?" asked the old stocking in the work basket.

"She's getting out her needle and yarn," replied the scissors.

"Well, well," exclaimed the stocking. "I'll be darned."

EXCURSION BOAT CATCHES ON FIRE

Grand Republic Lands All Her Passengers Safely.

CHIEF ENGINEER STUCK TO POST

Steamer Was Returning from Rockaway Beach When Fire Was Discovered—Damage Is Placed at About $4,000.

New York, July 7.—The giant three decker Republic, biggest excursion steamboat in this port, and capable of carrying nearly 4,000 souls, appeared in the Narrows at 2:30 o'clock Wednesday afternoon with a smoke pennant flying astern and her whistle screaming. She was on her midday trip from Rockaway Beach, where she had left more than 1,200 excursionists and less than fifty persons had decided to come aboard her. Her skipper, Edward Carman, a veteran steamboat man, had been notified that there was a blaze in the galley which is just aft amidships on the starboard side of the lower deck and had decided swiftly to run her to the nearest land, where he might get the help of trained men of the municipal fire force in case his own crew were unable to vanquish the blaze.

The spectacle of the sidewheeler, somewhat bigger than the luckless Gen Slocum, but reminiscent of her, rushing into the upper bay trailing smoke and screeching, drew a fleet of steam craft toward her, all anxious to take part in a rescue act, if there should be need of it, or to assist in putting out the fire. But the skipper kept right on his course, going at top speed, and the best that the pilots of a dozen tugs and the iron steamboat Cygnus could do was to look on as they headed for the big boat.

Among the first to see the smoke signal were the marine observers at quarantine, and they put their impressions on the wires to the city by dictating to the telegraph operators. Within five minutes after the Grand Republic's lights had been discovered, two revenue cutters were on their way down the bay to help.

The run of the Grand Republic to the Crescent Athletic club's pier at Bay Ridge was attended with no danger to her passengers, the number of which was variously estimated at sixteen to fifty. Most of the passengers were women and children and they showed no signs of fear, according to the purser.

The last man to stagger up from the suffocating hold was Chief Engineer Samuel Howard. He had a wet towel around his head and his eyes were red and watery. He had stuck to his post at the levers until the "last galloot was ashore" and he was pretty weak from the effects of the smoke. Unaware whether or not the old boat—she was built in 1873—was going to be his sepulchre, he had determined to respond to the captain's signal so long as he could hear them. He revived quickly when he got out into the air and aided in subduing the fire.

Secretary Bishop was unable to find how the fire had started, but the impression was that it was due to the flare of a superheated grease pan. An insurance man interested in the steamboat said that the damage was between $3,000 and $4,000.

FIGHT RECEIPTS LARGE

Promoters Make Close to $100,000 on Jeff-Johnson Fight.

Attendance Was 18,020—Rickard Issues Statement of Total Amount Received and Source.

Reno, Nev., July 7. — Tex Rickard gave out an official statement of receipts and attendance at the big fight. It shows the total gate receipts reached the enormous sum of $270,775. The paid admissions were 15,700.

In addition to those who paid to see the fight Rickard says there were 760 complimentary tickets given to the press and others. He estimates the number that slipped in at various places around the arena, breaking holes in the boarding or climbing up to the rim of the big structure, at 1,500. All told the attendance is given at 18,020.

The purse, with the bonuses given the two fighters, amounted to $121,000, and Rickard figured that his experience at San Francisco cost him about $30,000, and the arena and other expenses here about $20,000. Thus he and his partner, Gleason, will have a profit of about $100,000, besides their moving picture money.

BRYAN DECLINES TO BE CANDIDATE

REFUSES TO ENTER TOGA RACE

Issues Statement Setting Forth Position on Liquor Question—Petition Activity Will Be Dropped in View of Attitude.

Lincoln, Neb., July 7. — William J. Bryan gave out a statement again declining to be a candidate for United States senator and intended to discourage further activity among his supporters in that direction. In it Mr. Bryan says he believes he can work to better advantage without being a candidate for any office.

"I stated some months ago, that I was not a candidate for the senate and did not wish to be. I told inquiring friends that while I would not promise any one not to become a candidate, I regard the possibility of becoming a candidate as too remote to be considered by any one desiring to be a candidate and I was glad when others announced their candidacy. There were a number of reasons which combined to convince me that it would not be advisable for me to enter the race. The reason was that I saw this fight on the liquor question coming up and thought probably that I could do my duty without being hampered by a candidacy for any office. Later developments have justified me in the decision not to be a candidate.

"I am needed in this state fight and shall have plenty to do. The people of the state have done a great deal for me and I have not had a chance to do much for them in return. I have an opportunity now and I shall show my gratitude for past favors by rendering such service as a private citizen can render by helping to keep our party from becoming the tool of the liquor and other special interests."

Those in charge of the work of drafting Bryan, say that in view of his attitude there was no reason for any further activity in connection with the petitions.

Bankers and Postmasters Throughout the Country Are Slow to Demonstrate Their Interest.

Washington, July 7.—Since the passage of the new postal savings bank law, bankers and postmasters throughout the country have been slow to demonstrate their interest in it.

So far only fifty banks have made application for designation as depositories of postal funds and only fifty postmasters have asked that they be authorized to accept postal savings.

The indications are that the board of trustees, consisting of the postmaster general, the attorney general and the secretary of the treasury, will be unable to designate the postoffices that are to receive postal savings for many months to come.

BROWNE TRIAL IS SET FOR HEARING

Will Be Called in Chicago on Wednesday, July 20.

LATEST SENSATION IN CASE

Grocer Is Indicted by the Grand Jury on the Charge of Attempting to Corrupt One of the Jurors in First Trial.

Chicago, July 7.—By agreement between counsel the retrial of the case of Lee O'Neil Browne, charged with bribing Representative Charles A. White to vote for William Lorimer for United States senator, was continued to July 20.

Attorneys for Browne would say nothing concerning a report that they intended to ask for a change of venue from Judge McSurely.

John Malloy, grocer at Sixty-third street and Washington avenue, was indicted by the July grand jury on a charge of attempting to corrupt Oscar Morford, one of the members of the jury that tried Browne on the charge of bribery.

Morford was one of the four men who held out for a verdict of acquittal. Malloy is charged with having tried to induce Mrs. Morford to ask her husband to hold out for Browne. She went to Malloy's store June 11 and received from him, it is charged, several cigars to give to her husband. She was told, it is alleged, to whisper to him to hold out for acquittal.

"He will never have to work in a switch yard again if he holds out," Malloy is said to have whispered.

Mrs. Morford went back to the grocery June 13 and Malloy is said to have asked her if she delivered the message to her husband. She is said to have answered "No."

Morford is a railway switchman. It was charged during the Browne trial that a man in the courtroom made a sign to Morford—the switchman's signal to "go ahead."

The indictment of Malloy came as the sensational aftermath of a series of charges made by the state's attorney during the Browne trial that attempts had been made to tamper with the jury. The prosecutor even said he was convinced the jury was "fixed."

ILLINOIS CROP REPORT

Corn in Poor Condition Owing to Cool Weather.

Hessian Fly Is Reported in About Sixty Counties—Apples Will Average One-Fourth of Crop.

Springfield, Ill., July 7.—The bulletin issued by the state board of agriculture giving the condition of the crops on June 20 shows corn to be in poor condition. The crop in the state is only 82 per cent of the normal, being 80 per cent in the northern district and 83 per cent in the central and southern districts. The cool weather of April and May greatly retarded the growth of corn, but the warm weather of June had a marked effect on its growth.

The condition of winter wheat in the state on June 20 is reported at 84 per cent, of a seasonable average, being 92 per cent in northern Illinois, 79 per cent in central, and 81 per cent in southern Illinois. Hessian fly is reported in about sixty counties.

Oats is in fine condition, being within 6 per cent of a seasonable average. Rye is 95 per cent of a seasonable average, meadows but 81 per cent and pastures 92 per cent. There will be a light yield of fruit. Apples will average about one-fourth of a crop.

BIG FIRE AT CENTREVILLE

Half of Business Section of St. Joseph County Seat Burned.

Loss Is Placed at $75,500—Blaze Resulted from Premature Explosion of Fireworks.

Centreville, Mich., July 7.—Centreville, the county seat of St. Joseph county, experienced the worst fire in its history, burning every building for half a block, taking practically half of the business houses of the village.

The fire, which resulted from the premature explosion of fireworks, started in the hardware store of Fousel & Lowery. The flames spread rapidly. After an hour of fighting the volunteer department of Centreville called on Three Rivers for assistance, but the combined efforts of the department from that town and the local fire fighters was unavailing because of a shortage in the water supply which gave out soon after the Three Rivers department reached here.

The stock in the hardware store was entirely destroyed. Some of the stock in the other stores was saved and many had narrow escapes from being injured by falling timbers while carrying goods from the burning buildings.

FEAR TROUBLE IN CHICAGO

No Demonstration Will Be Allowed When Pugilist Arrives Today.

Chicago, July 7.—Fear of race riots in the downtown district of Chicago today when Jack Johnson, heavyweight champion of the world, comes home from Reno, caused Chief of Police Steward to issue an order forbidding any formal celebration to welcome the conquering negro.

No band, no parade, no formal demonstration will be allowed the champion when he steps off his special car at the Northwestern station today, although hundreds of negroes will be present to give their hero spontaneous greeting.

The demeanor of many of the sons of Ham on South State street has already resulted in many minor encounters.

FLYING BALL BAT KILLS BOY

Fellow Player, From Whose Hand It Slipped, Held by Police.

Dallas, Tex., July 7. — Morris McLaurin, 11 years old, son of Dr. M. L. McLaurin, a leading physician, was killed here at a ball game.

John Perrata, aged 18 years, swung with all his strength at the ball and missed it. The bat flew out of his hands with terrific force and the large end hit young McLaurin just behind the ear. He fell unconscious and was dead in a few minutes. Perrata is detained at police headquarters pending investigation.

It is all right to get on your dignity once in a while and let it be known that you are a live wire, but you need not be unpleasant about it.

A Mystery

The Wagon Train That Was Lost In the Mountains

By B. CRITTENDEN LYTLE

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

Years ago, when there were no railroads between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, a wagon train was lost in the Sierra Nevada mountains. It was last seen by some Indian hunters. Searching parties went out to find it without success. At last it was given up and forgotten.

The leader of the party was Edward Earle. He was a widower with a little daughter, Elizabeth, whom he had left in the east in care of his sister. Elizabeth was five years old when her father was last heard from, but she took a deep interest in the story of his disappearance. What to older people was a mystery was to her a child's story similar to those she read in her fairy books. It did not occur to her that there was anything more wonderful in the disappearance of a wagon train consisting of half a dozen teams and ten or twelve people than in changing a man into a frog. In other words, she did not realize that the one really happened and the other was impossible.

But as Elizabeth grew beyond the age to be impressed by the imagination this story of the lost wagon train began to grow upon her. Had it not been given to her by those in whom she had confidence she would not have believed it. A man might disappear to return many years after with an explanation. But how could wagons, horses and men all go out like a candle?

Elizabeth was the only person who fancied that her father would some day come back. Her elders did not oppose her in this, though they did not pretend to agree with her. But as time wore on she realized that the case of the wagon train her father conducted was like that of a ship going down under some marine catastrophe, carrying with it every living person. There came a hope that her father had left some message for her which she would some day receive. She was told that he had had some property, but he alone knew where it was located. No will had ever been found nor any other papers to throw light upon his affairs. But this was not strange since he had all his effects with him.

By the time Elizabeth had become eighteen this question of her father's disappearance had grown upon her to such an extent that it became a sort of monomania. Possibly this resulted from trying to solve an insoluble question. She was continually asking herself how such a thing could happen. One of her suppositions was that the train had been carried away by a cloudburst. Another was that it had been buried under an avalanche. But in the case of the cloudburst the remains of men, horses and wagons would be carried down where they would be seen, and in the case of the avalanche they would appear as soon as the snow melted. It was brooding on these problems that at last threatened to affect Elizabeth's mind.

When Henry Merryweather began to court Elizabeth her aunt hoped that a living interest would relieve her from the burden of a dead one. Henry was a fine fellow and grew more and more wrapped in the serious girl, made so by a mystery. By delicate attentions he endeavored to withdraw her mind from the topic upon which it was abnormally fastened. But his efforts were a failure. Despite all he could do he elicited only an occasional smile, a temporary interest.

The time had come when Elizabeth felt that she must relieve her aunt of her support, and she accepted a position as teacher in a school. Occupation helped her in the matter that was troubling her, but did not cure her. Often in the midst of her duties she would find herself endeavoring to solve the problem of the lost wagon train.

As a last resort Henry Merryweather resolved to go out to the region where the train was last seen with a view to solving the mystery. He hoped that if he could bring back any plausible solution Elizabeth would accept it and she would regain her normal status. Without saying anything to her in reference to his intention he set out for the Sierra Nevadas and the region where the train had been last seen.

Fifteen years had passed since the tragedy or whatever it was occurred, and settlers had come into the region that had been a solitude. Henry, obtaining a good horse, set out to go over the pass where the train had been lost. The mystery was so well known that he had no difficulty in locating the position where it had been last seen. One of the equipments he possessed for his quest was a taste for geology. As he rode along he noted the character of the rocks, the flow of the streams, the configuration of the soil. As he passed through a canyon in which ran a mountain stream he came to a point where the ground formed a dam, making a small lake. It seemed to him that this could not have long been so. The trees growing on the dam were all very young. He wondered if it had not been thrown across the stream by some shaking of the earth. He looked up and saw that the soil on which he stood formed a direct incline for several thousand feet to a spot where a side of a mountain seemed to have been scooped out. It occurred to him that a large mass of earth far above had slid down and formed the dam on which he stood.

Might not the lost wagon train have been buried under this landslide?

The more he studied the configurations about him the more he was convinced that some cause, either a clap of thunder, a snowslide or an earthquake, had loosened the mountain side and thrown it down and across the road. Then by riding back and forth he traced the old road, noting its junction with a later one both above and below the dam. While he was satisfied that this avalanche of earth might have buried the lost train, he had no hope that he would be able to find any vestige of man, beast or wagon without employing a host of men to remove the earth from the old road, a part of which was now covered with water. But he could tell Elizabeth of his find and assure her of his belief that the wagon train had been buried under the landslide.

He argued that if those connected with the train had seen the mountain side coming they would run to get out of its way. If they were nearer the upper side of it they would run forward; if nearer the lower side they would run backward. The upper side now being a lake, it could not be examined. Merryweather rode down to where the old road, striking the dam, was deflected, to climb it by a gradual incline. Dismounting, he tied his horse to a sapling and began to look about him.

He searched a good while, bending down close to the earth that he might the better see anything unusual. His search was fruitless. Mounting, he rode to the nearest house to remain all night and in the morning bring something to dig with. That night it rained and the next day and the next till it seemed that an ocean was being precipitated. Then it cleared, and Merryweather, taking a pick and a shovel, went back to continue his hunt.

He found that the rain had washed away portions of the dam, and its side was covered with little gullies, some of them quite deep. He examined a number of these gullies, but found nothing. At the point where the road made the turn to ascend the dam he put in his pick. Presently its point struck something that gave out the ring of metal. Inserting the pick again, he threw out a horseshoe.

Though elated with his find, he did not consider it by any means important, but it stimulated him to dig on. A root or something harder than the earth under where the horseshoe had been found next attracted his attention. He dug around it and exposed a horse's hoof and in a few more strokes the bones of a leg to which the hoof belonged.

"Eureka!" he exclaimed. "The mystery of the lost wagon train is solved!"

He worked all day unearthing the metal parts of harness, gun barrels, bones of human beings and horses. At last he struck the wheel of a wagon. Then he went away to announce his find.

The news that the lost wagon train had been found spread. Merryweather hired half a dozen men to excavate, but so great was the interest among the people that many of them dug on their own account, some doubtless hoping to find articles of value. It was apparent that the train had been turned suddenly and headed down the canyon. Some of the wagons had not been completely reversed before they were buried.

Among the articles recovered was an iron box. Merryweather took possession of it, opened it and found that it belonged to Edward Earle. It contained several hundred dollars in gold and a number of papers.

Some of the papers were deeds to property in the region to which the caravan was going—a region where gold had then been recently discovered. Merryweather, after the excavations were concluded, rode on to what had been the destination of the train. The unearthed papers all belonged to Elizabeth Earle, and it was his purpose to transact for her any business that might be necessary. He found conditions that he was sure would make a great change in the girl he loved.

One evening Elizabeth heard a footstep in the hall, and a moment later she was clasped in the strong arms of Henry Merryweather.

"The mystery is solved, sweetheart!" he exclaimed.

He led her to a sofa and gave her an account of his efforts and their outcome. "And now," he continued, "there is news intrinsically of far greater importance to you than the solving of the mystery. You are very rich. Your father before starting on his last earthly journey made a will leaving you all he possessed. It was of no value then, but now on a portion of it is one of the largest mines in the west. You are the real owner, and I have brought you a proposition from its wrongful owners to transfer to you one-third of the stock of the company. This alone will give you a splendid income."

As the lover had expected, the unraveling of the mystery and the changes it led to in Elizabeth's life relieved her of her unhealthy current of thought and gave her new mental occupation. Not the least of the results was a husband, to whom she was indebted for bringing her good fortune.

As the mysterious disappearance of the wagon train was for years a fruitful source of discussion among those who knew of it, so since Merryweather unraveled it both chapters of the story are still told to interested listeners in the region where it occurred. The location, too, is one of the points of interest to tourists.

THE SAYINGS AND TEACHINGS OF BROOKLYN TABERNACLE BIBLE STUDIES

WITHOUT A PARABLE HE SPAKE NOT.

July 10.

"The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life."—John 6:63.

"WITHOUT a parable spake he not unto the people." What the prophet had declared of him was true, "He shall open his mouth in parables and in dark sayings." It is important that we remember this. Many noble Christian people have inferred that our Lord's words were all simple, and that they presented the truth in a manner easily understood by everybody. Nothing is further from the truth. If our Lord's parables and dark sayings be taken as plain, literal statements of truth, they will lead to all kinds of errors and misapprehensions. Let us remember, therefore, the Apostle's declaration: "Without a parable spake he not unto the people."

There is absolutely nothing in the words of Jesus without a deep significance. How many have stumbled over our Lord's parables by taking them to be literal statements of facts! How absurd the conclusion drawn from the parable of the rich man and Lazarus, for instance. How absurd to conclude that simply because a man was rich, fared sumptuously every day, and was garbed in fine linen, that he must suffer through all eternity. How equally absurd to interpret the poor man Lazarus, who lay at the rich man's gate, as representing literally, poor and diseased beggars. How unreasonable to think that only such as have had an experience of this kind, with dogs to lick their sores, and hungering for the crumbs that fell from the rich man's table, would experience the joys of heaven, according to the Divine program. How foolish to think of Abraham's bosom, which could hold only two or three, as being the portion of blessing for only a handful of beggars.

Truly these various statements of the parable shine out in beauty and consistency as we get the true light upon them, and see their symbolic meaning and application. We have already presented the true interpretation of this parable, and may do so again at some future time, for the benefit of new readers. We merely demonstrate now the fact that our Lord spoke to the people always in parables and dark sayings.

Note afresh the parable of the wheat and the tares, the gathering of the former into the garner and the burning of the latter. Neither represents literal experiences. In the parable the wheat is not literal wheat, the tares are not literal tares. The wheat symbolizes the inheritors of the Kingdom; the tares symbolize the offsprings of error—children of the wicked one. The gathering into the barn of safety symbolizes the glorification of the Church on the spirit plane, and precedes the shining forth of the sons of God in the glory of the Millennial Kingdom, for the blessing of the groaning creation; as the Apostle declares, "The whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together, waiting for the manifestation of the sons of God." The whole creation is waiting for the shining forth of the sons of God in the Kingdom, and their shining forth in truth and righteousness will scatter all the darkness of sin and error and awaken and revivify the world of mankind.

Eventually all the willingly obedient may enjoy the blessings of eternal life. On the other hand, the description of the burning of the tares, instead of referring to the literal burning, has, evidently, a symbolic significance—it means the destruction of the tare class—not their destruction as individuals, but as "tares," as imitations of the "wheat" class.

How glad we are to find the key to these symbolic statements—these parables. How glad we are that by the use of this key the parabolic figures become reasonable and beautiful. What a silver lining there is to the dark cloud of trouble which is now loomding up before the world! How glad God's people must be to learn that just beyond the clouds and shadows comes the glorious Millennial day.

The parable of "the sheep and the goats," taken literally, has caused confusion to many. They think of the separation of the sheep and the goats as now in progress, failing to notice the Scriptural declaration that the parable shall find its application "when the Son of man shall come in his glory and all his holy angels (messengers) with him. Then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory and before him shall be gathered all nations, and he shall separate them one from another as the shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats." We thus see that the application of the parable belongs to the Millennial age. All through that age the work of Christ and the Church, his Bride, seated with him upon his throne, will be a work of blessing to the world of mankind. And the manner in which those blessings will be received will demonstrate the sheep-like or goat-like character of every individual of the human family. The sheep-like will come to the right hand position of favor; the goat-like, to the left hand position of disfavor. The conclusion of the thousand-year Judgment day will bring the expression of the Lord's favor towards the sheep-like, rewarding them with eternal life, and the expression of his disfavor towards the goat-like, destroying them in the "second death." This is symbolically represented by the statement, "Depart ye cursed into the lasting fire (a figure of destruction) prepared for Satan and his messengers (followers)." The reward of the righteous will thus be everlasting life. The "everlasting punishment" of the unrighteous will be everlasting death, for "The wages of sin is death and the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."—Romans 6:23.

Evidently some wise and gracious purpose stands connected with the hiding or secreting at present of the Divine purpose from mankind in general. While the Scriptures declare it is a mark of special favor to the Lord's people that they are made acquainted with the Divine Purposes, yet nowhere do they declare that all those from whom God's plans are secreted are doomed to eternal torture, or to everlasting destruction. Thus our Lord Jesus prayed: "I thank thee, Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent and hast revealed them unto babes. Even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight."

Had the hiding of the Divine counsel from mankind signified eternal torture for those from whom it was hidden, there surely would have been no ground for thanking the heavenly Father for this act. We can thank him, however, that although many of the worldly wise are not privileged to know of his glorious plans, nevertheless those plans are sure. For the world to have known of the divine purposes in advance would doubtless have been injurious, because in their blindness they would have attempted to thwart these purposes and therefore would have gotten themselves into a worse condition of condemnation.

Our text shows that however dark and parabolic were our Lord's teachings, nevertheless, rightly understood, his message is one that is spiritually helpful and life-giving to those who can and do understand it. It is this quality of our Lord's message which makes the religion of the Bible different from that of all the heathen. It is a message of life as well as a message of holiness. It is a message of forgiveness as well as a message of condemnation. It is a message of love as well as a message of justice. His wonderful words of life are charming, beautiful, forceful. We may read them over year after year and we see still more beauty in them, still deeper significance, and that in proportion to our own growth in grace, our growth in knowledge, and in the spirit of our Master.

President Hutchins U. of M.

Harry Burns Hutchins who has been elected President of the University of Michigan by the board of regents, has been identified with the university for many years, and is considered one of the leading educators of the country in his specialty law. Since 1895 he has been dean of the department of law and has brought about notable improvements. By lengthensng and strengthening the course he accomplished the enlargement of the department, and his work has done much to give Michigan a high standing among the law schools of the country. His administrative ability has been shown since he became acting president of the university last October, following the retirement of the veneaable President Angell, and on a previous temporary occupancy of the office.

President Hutchins was born at Litson, N. H., April 8, 1847, the son of Carleton Brown and Nancy (Merrill) Hutchins. His early education and college preparatory course were obtained in eastern schools. Entering the University of Michigan, he was graduated in 1871 with the degree of bachelor of philosophy. For a year he was superintenendent of schools at Owosso, Mich., and then returned to the university, where he was instructor in history and English for one year and assistant professor of history and English for three years. During this time he took a course in law and in 1876 was admitted to the bar.

Beginning practice at Mount Clemens, Mich., he was soon elected city attorney. His practice and reputation grew rapidly and the firm of which he was a member—Crocker & Hutchins—had offices in Detroit as well as Mount Clemens. In 1881 Mr. Hutchins was appointed by the Supreme Court of Michigan a member of the committee to annotate the reports of that body. He revised annotate five volumes of the reports, in 1885 and 1883. In 1884 he was recalled to the university to become Jay professor of law, and held that chair until 1887, when he went to Cornell University to aid in organizing the newly formed law department of that institution. As professor of law and associate dean he remained at Cornell until 1895. During these eight years the attendance in the Cornell law department rose from 50 to 300 and the school prospered in other respects.

In 1895 he returned to Michigan to become dean of the law department. When President Angell went to Turkey in 1897 to be United States minister to that country, Dean Hutchins was chosen acting president. Thus he was tried in the most important executive office twelve years before his second appointment to it nearly a year ago, and his good record in the first instance was the cause of his being chosen again. In 1890 he was offered the presidency of the Iowa State University, but declined. During the years he has been at the head of the law school and acting president he has endeared to him the great body of students at the university and has gained the respect and confidence of his members of the faculty.

THE OCCIDENT AND ORIENT UNITE

In Buffalo Bill's Wild West and Pawnee Bill's Far East Which Comes to

Adrian, Mich., July 11.

The interesting announcement is made that Buffalo Bill's Wild West and Pawnee Bill's Far East will exhibit as indicated above. A remarkable event is announced in the leave-taking from public life of the old scout Buffalo Bill," who is making a last bow to each city he now visits—a valdictory. It is further stated that arrangements have been made with officials of the railroads to run reduced rate excursions on that date, thus affording to visit the exhibition at a minimum of expense. Two vast enterprises are now allied under one management. The union of Buffalo Bill's Wild West with Pawnee Bill's Far East brings together two great factors in out-of-door entertainment. While of course the general style of the combined entertainment remains the same as when they were separate units in public amusement there will be many features entirely new to this style of exhibition. The far East contingent will be represented in an Oriental spectacle of great beauty and splendor; introducing many picturesque types which inhabit the romantic East. In this scene and as a particular feature, Rossi's Musical Elephants, imported at an expense of $1,000 per week, will introduce their remarkable exhibition; playing various musical instruments, dancing, and in other manners evidencing their remarkable sagacity and wonderful training. In the Wild West section, Col. Wm. F. Cody, the last of the great scouts, will appear in the saddle at every performance, leading his Congress of Roughriders in some remarkable exhibition of expert horsemenship. The chief scenic feature will be the Battle of Summit Springs, a reproduction of one of the deciding conflicts in Indian warfare; a battle in which Col. Cody participated and in which he shot and killed Chief Tall Bull. In A Holiday at "T-E" Ranch will be pictured the pleasures and pastimes of the plainsman, cowboy sports and a dance upon the green. The contrast to this scene of peaceful revelry will be shown in a sudden attack by Indians. Many new features have been added to make Col. Cody's final visit one to be remembered as an honest tribute to a long career of honest effort.

DETROIT TO INDIANAPOLIS.

We had a very pleasant call Tuesday moruing from a couple of young men, who came by rail to Detroit from Indianapolis Ind., and were on their way home making the trip on foot. They were Chas. L. Marshall and Albert Shearer of Indianopolis, and were newspaper boys in the office of the Indianopolis Press. They had made the trip from Detroit in good order, leaving there at 5 a. m., and it was not quite 8 a. m. when they reached our office. They slept out of doors making a bed of the sweet hay that they found so bountifully spread out for them. After resting for an hour they went out for breakfast, and then started out for Adrian their next stopping place. They came from Detroit via Ann Arbor as they were quite interested in our U. of M.

They were bright pleasant young men, and we predict for them a fine future. We shall wait with interest for a writeup of their trip.

When we read of the enthusiasm displayed by the Adrian Fans over baseball team it takes us back to the days when we boasted of as good a team as any in the league, and the good times we used to have.

Adrian is justly proud and we do not blame them for greeting the conquerlug hero's as they come home. We hope they may hold the foot and stand first at the end of the season.

CHICAGO STREET---NORTH SIDE

Let us take our readers today, down the north side of Chicago street as it is now. You will all remember the fine residence of B. J. Bidwell which is just across from the Agricultural works for a number of years this has been run as The Coller House more particularly for boarders though there are many transients who make that their stopping place. Our opera house comes next, then the home of the Tecumseh Herald, quite a commodious building. The upper part is occupied by the Tecumseh club, who have very fine quarters. An ice cream parlor and bakery come next which is a very pleasant place to patronize

A fruit store occupies the next place and following this is a bowling alley, a meat market; and in the old place where Geo. Smith used to have a furniture store is one yet, run by Guy E. Belding. Two grocery stores next brings us up to the Barrett house or the Lilley house as it was first called. Changes are going on here, the Tecumseh State Savings Bank being about to move in on the corner. The hotel office will be located in the part adjoining Lowery's grocery and we look for a fine corner when the improvements are all finished.

Across the railroad is the Masonic building, the stores being occupied by Spayde's shoe store and Heesen & Heesen with Men's clothing. The next place is unoccupied at present. A moving picture theatre is next and Stahl & Service with a fine stock of furniture are the new occupants in the store following. A 5 & 10c store is followed by the Tecumseh Savings bank, then Satterthwaite Bros. with hardware occupy two stores. C. A. Wright & Son still run the drug store where Moses Wright presided long years ago. A soft drink saloon is next then Anderson Bros.' grocery and Gilbert's grocery.

Mrs. Hanford's millinery, Ida B. Chase's novelty store and on the corner the grocery store and dry goods stores of Wm. Palman. This takes in the immediate business places on the north side of the street and our readers will note the many changes from the past years.

Business Change.

The Lenawee Lumber Co., completed a deal this last week by which the business is transfered to Mr. M. L. Mulvany, who will conduct it in the future. We are sorry to lose are sorry to lose are townsmen, Mr. Frank D. Hammond and family from our midst, but we hope the change may be for his best interest.

PAGE-WORDEN.

Married in Jackson July 2, at the home of her brother Miles Page, Miss Edna Page of Tecumseh and Haskell Worden of Jackson. After the ceremony luncheon was served and the young couple then left for Gregory to spend a week with relatives. They will return to Jackson where their home is already awaiting them.

The Herald force join in best wishes for the young couple and hope that Edna may prove proficient in the manufacture of pie of which she had such a horror while here.

All Who Suffer from Catarrh, Sore Throat or Colds

Millions of people throughout America have breathed Hyomei (pronounce it High-o-me) and now own a Hyomei Inhaler made of hard rubber

If you own a Hyomei Inhaler, no matter where you live, you can get a bottle of Hyomei at druggists everywhere and at C. A. Wright & Son's for only 50c.

Ask for an extra bottle of Hyomei Inhalent; the price is only 50c and witn it you can cure a cough or a cold in a day.

You can get relief from catarrh or stuffed up head in two minutes and stop hawking and snuffing in a week.

Just pour a few drops of Hyomei into the inhaler and breathe it in—that's all you have to do.

It's so easy and so pleasant and so much more desirable than swallowing nasuating drugs. Breathe Hyomei over the inflamed membrane of the nose and throat and its soothing, healing action will be felt immediately.

If you have not a Hyomei Inhaler get a complete Hyomei outfit at once. This only costs $1.00 and with it comes a Hyomei Inhaler that will last a lifetime and ought to be in every family.

POTATO METHODS

Very Little Level Cultivation—Importance of Spraying Declared to be Extravagant—Seed all Cut.

Many of the methods which have made Aroostook county in Maine famous for its potatoes can be applied with advantage by all potato growers. The following description has been prepared by an Aroostook expert for the American Cultivator: We usually begin preparing for the potato crop the year before, he says by plowing all the sod land we intend to use for the crop. Some use part of the land two years in succession going over the whole farm that way in rotation. But those who have land enough use it for potatoes only once in each rotation. Some sow grain once and others twice in the rotation and seed to grass in the farm. Some spread the manure on the sod ground and plow it down, others spread it on top of the furrows and harrow it in. Others claim it is impossible to raise good, clean, sound potatoes with manure put on anyway directly for that crop, they say it is apt to make them both scabby and rotten. But the majority favor a liberal use of ready mixed commercial fertilizers, 800 to 1000 pounds an acre, all of it put on in one application with the planter.

Since we got the Green Mountain potato there has been a great change for the better in yield per acre and in its blight and bug resisting qualities, it is far ahead of any potato we ever raised in the country before. Now the Irish Cobbler bids fair to excel it in all these good points and also in price. The last lots of them brought $3 a barrel this winter. Our farmers are not, as a rule, so very particular about how the seed is cut, so long as it's cut up. Some rig up an apparatus that will hash up a potato at one clip into four and six pieces; some drive a knife into a board and shove the potato against it until it is cut into as many pieces as it will make. Still others hold the knife in the hand and cut off pieces with one, two or three eyes on each. It seems to be not so very important how the tuber is cut. The main object is to get it cut up some. Certain farmers cut away a thin chip from the seed end, while others discard the eye near the root end. The idea is gaining adherents steadily that we must use the Iowa method of seed selection to improve our potato crop, because the potato deteriorates so quickly where it is planted year after year on the same farms. But with proper seed selection it should steadily improve.

We commonly use only eight pickers in the planter. The machinery most in use in the county is fitted up with 10, but that arrangement plants the seed too closely in the row. With the new improvements it can be set to use nine, and that strikes the happy medium between too far apart or too close. The machine is usually run so the inside wheel runs in the furrow made by the disc coverer, while a few run it in the wheel track. The first makes the rows about 2½ feet apart, the latter about three feet apart.

We start the cultivator the next week, or within eight or 10 days after they are planted. Then it is kept going all through the summer as long as we can get between the tops. The horse hoe is used three to four times, too. This gives a large ridge for the tubers to grow in. We always plant in ridges, as we don't believe in level culture. The fact is, the seed is dropped practically on top of the ground and the soil ridged up over them. This method makes it easier to dig them with machine or by hand. As a rule we go over the field once or twice in the season with hand hoes to clean out the weeds between the plants, but this is done very fast in many cases. One man said he and a small boy went over five acres in one day and that means at a fast walk.

Spraying? No doubt now that spraying sometimes helps the crop by preventing blight, and so gives a longer time to grow, thereby increasing the yield, but there is also no doubt in my mind that its importance is often greatly exaggerated. There is a bunch of us farmers that seldom use the sprayer, in fact not at all the past three years and our crop has not been appreciably smaller nor badly affected with blight and rot. When one takes into account the labor and time and cost of materials one has to figure awfully close to find any profit in it here. More so where water is scarce and hard to get at, as in my case. But when like one of my neighbors, one has three smart sons to help him, it is an easy job to spray 15 to 25 acres several times in a season. They figure it pays them to do it because the cost of application is more than offset by the increased yields.

Digging usually begins after the middle of September, but those who have only a few acres don't begin until the first of October, so we get done about the middle of the month. Most of us pick up all the small potatoes and haul them to the starch factory. Some years when rot affects them badly all these go into the factory, as well as the scabbiest ones. But it seems the market takes more scabby potatoes every year; at least there wasn't much fault found about that defect the past winter, while a few years ago they were so fussy not a spotted one would be accepted.

We use the empty phosphate barrels to live as it did a hundred years ago. But cheer up! Most of us are earning more than forty times as much as we did then.

Sample Helps Frail Women

So many women are dragging out weary lives just because their digestive organs are weak. The result is poor circulation, nervousness and the verge of invalidism. It is often very unnecessary and the woman's own fault.

The first thing to do is to look to the welfare of your bowels. There the trouble usually lies. All physicians know that a large percentage of women are habitually constipated, and from this results indigestion, piles, weariness, etc., that women constantly complain of. But there is no use taking "female remedies" and things of that kind until you have started your bowels to moving. You will find that when the bowels move regularly once or twice a day all your petty ills will disappear. Take a good, mild laxative tonic like Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin for awhile and you will find yourself rapidly getting better and stronger, your bowels will regulate themselves and work at stated times, and then your headaches and dizziness will disappear. Don't take strong cathartic pills or salts, but just such a mild and pleasant-tasting remedy as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin.

You can obtain a bottle of your druggist for fifty cents or one dollar, and either size may be enough to permanently cure you. Thousands of women keep it regularly in the house and will no longer be without it, as it cured them and can be used with safety by every member of the family, down to the youngest child, but if you have never used it take the advice of Mrs. Earl S. Cox, 409 Twenty-fifth street, Moline, Ill., and Mrs. Ellen Dungan, Muncie, Ind., and send to Dr. Caldwell for a free trial bottle, as they did, and learn for yourself what it will do in your own case. That it will cure you, as it did them, there is no doubt.

Dr. Caldwell personally will be pleased to give you any medical advice you may desire for yourself or family pertaining to the stomach, liver or bowels absolutely free of charge. Explain your case in a letter and he will reply to you in detail. For the free sample simply send your name and address on a postal card or otherwise. For either request the doctor's address is Dr. W. B. Caldwell, R.500 Caldwell building, Monticello, Ill.

THE PHOTOGRAPH FIEND.

It is a maxim of the common law that for every wrong there is a remedy somewhere. That, indeed, is a maxim of human nature itself, of whose equalities the common law is an expression. It is agreeable to note that the ingenuity of men and women is gradually evolving protective arrangements against what may be called camera trespass. The latest but not the last word on the subject came the other day from a woman witness in a trial of considerable interest. She objected to being photographed, and shielded herself from that possibility outside the courtroom by carrying an umbrella and wearing a mask of the kind in requisition for the winter masquerades.

The old impulse to smash the camera or its operator has much to recommend it, but it is like the uneven struggle between a battleship and a swarm of torpedo boats; if a single torpedo boat escapes destruction the battleship turns turtle. A single man cannot attack a dozen agile photographers with any hope of putting all of them out of commission. A woman has no chance at that game at all, although one or two robust women have recently done more execution than might have been promised.

The mask and the umbrella are a better and cheaper protection; yet even they are incomplete. Add a barrel to the outfit and all the elements of security are present.

To elderly people London is no longer a pleasant place of residence. The streets have become a labyrinth of horror and difficulty, a region of hideous sounds and foul smells. With motor buses toppling over on the sidewalk and private motors knocking down lampposts and impinging on the shelters, the unfortunate citizen knows not whither to wend his trembling steps.—London Graphic.

This ought to give some comfort to those who want to know how people are ever going to get about in the New York of the future.

RICH MEN'S KIN.

There is good authority for the statement that it is difficult for a rich man to enter the kingdom of Heaven. Yet it is possible for him to do so and have his earthly wealth forgiven him by Providence. It is probably impossible for him to have his wealth forgiven him by all his relatives. "God gives us our relatives, but thank God, we can choose our friends," is a modern epigram sufficiently cynical. There is evidence enough in the experience of every very wealthy man to support the theory that some of his relatives were "given" him to chasten his spirit through trial.

The very successful man with a numerous family circle is in for some trying experiences. He is apt to be looked upon by some of his connection as a sort of earthly providence. Like charity, he must suffer long and be kind. He must stand for perpetual "touches" which the euphemy of the parties of the second part disguises [illegible] make bad bargains with his kith and kin. To insist on getting back his principal is odious, to remind them that there is some interest coming to him is atrocious, to close out a mortgage stamps him as an enemy of his kind. Only a monster in human form would suggest to a relative who has adopted the comfortable theory of life that "Cousin Bill owes me a living" that he has a pair of stout legs and arms of his own.

What the daughters of the horseleech said is of record. "Give! Give!" was their refrain. It is not of record what the nephews and nieces and the cousins through the various degrees of consanguinity said; but it was doubtless to the same effect. The world has had several notable instances of collateral relatives mobilizing and descending in a body on the estate of a rich man's widow, and has its own discount ready for any expressions of disappointment or dislike, post-mortem or ante-mortem. Fashionable clergymen have much to say about "the trials of the rich, but have they not failed to take due account of this one?

SCIENTIFIC BURGLARY.

An enterprising burglar in Germany has brought science to his aid and has the loot to show for it. But he is keeping himself and the loot well concealed. With a can of oxygen and some calcium carbide the criminal rigged a blowpipe with which he fused the steel fastenings of a safe and made off with its contents. Of course, this happened in Germany, where education is universal and compulsory. Where else, we should like to know, would a man with technical training take to burglary as a profitable occupation?

But if the scientific burglar is superior to the old style safe he is not long to enjoy his mastery. The young technicians in the safe factories have already designed doors containing explosives that will cause a commotion when the fusing flame is applied. When this device is in use we shall no longer read of burglars having "blown the safe." We may then expect startling headlines to this effect: "Burglar blown by safe." Attempt to fuse the combination results in terrific explosion!"

This German technical education is a great thing. It would be nice if it could be limited to the honest, but even the German savants have not yet discovered the bacillus of burglary. Until it is discovered no serum culture can be made for the inoculation of the youth to render them immune to the germs of robbery. The scientific safe makers, however, promise an excellent substitute. The proper placing of a little tri-nitrin compound, they are sure, will be an effective cure. The man who tries a blowpipe where the medicine has been placed will be immune from further temptation forever. We hope so. Science has no real place in the business of burlary and the sooner the scientific burglar is eliminated from the scheme of things the better. The German inn-keeper is entitled to his peaceful slumber.

CORPORATION REGULATION OF MANNERS.

Railway companies now prescribe the kind of neckties conductors and trainmen shall wear. Business houses in Chicago and elsewhere make drinking and race-track betting ground for dismissal. Waiters sacrifice their mustaches to the aesthetic ideals of restaurant managers. Clerks are forbidden to smoke cigarettes. Boy readers find their favorite authors withheld from them by library directors. What their elders shall read and what pictures they may look at is determined by agents of anti-vice societies. Courtship may not be carried on in parks at night and sweethearts holding hands in public do so at the risk of arrest.

For a free people we put up with a good deal of regulation. But what critic can truthfully charge us with deterioration in morals and manners when corporations take on themselves the former duties of Sunday school teachers and professors of polite deportment?

One important difference, between the automobile and the horse is that the latter can exercise a veto power over a reckless driver. You can't drive a horse over an embankment or against a stone wall.

BRITISH VS. AMERICAN BOYS.

Taken as a general proposition, Kirk Bowden's assumption that the English boy is superior to the American boy in the matter of learning a mechanic's trade and keeping at it is a libel on the youth of this land. The British boy who learns a trade is still, despite the democratic advance in his native country, subject to class conditions and traditions. In the average case he looks upon himself as having been born to a station in which he is destined to remain. He is not dazzled by sudden flights of his fellows to wealth and power. His forming mind is diverted by no visions of a seat in Congress or the chair in the White House. He is a shoemaker who sticks to his last.

Contrasted with the spirit of workaday solidity thus indicated is the vaulting ambition to reach social and financial heights which frequently causes the American boy to run and leap where he might more wisely take time to trudge. Vain dreams of quick wealth and easy soaring become readily mischievous in young mins. They are far from inevitable to American youth. But they find promotion in an educational system rich in book culture and regrettably poor in practical trades teaching.

A BLOODLESS EXECUTION.

Two friends were discussing the possibility of killing a perfectly well bodily harm, without frightening him to death or by tempting him to dissipation. One claimed that death could not be brought about except by some overt act to produce bodily injury.

"A man can be killed," the other contended, "simply by going through the form of an execution."

"That would be by shock."

"Not at all. He shall know beforehand that he is not to suffer the slightest bodily harm."

To illustrate, the last speaker told the following true story:

Lang Ting Fung of San Francisco, washee-washee man called Charlie Fung by his "Melican" acquaintances was accused of revealing the secrets of the Ti Whang society, of which he was a member. Summoned before the society to answer to the charge, he was assigned counsel and duly tried. Though ably defended, he was convicted of having revealed certain methods of the San Francisco Chinese underground railroad for smuggling Chinamen into the United States. The punishment was death, and the sentence was to be carried out immediately in the presence of the assembled members of the society.

"Call the executioner," said the presiding officer in solemn tones that reverberated through the silent hall as if some one had struck a gong.

A big Chinaman entered from another room, carrying one of those large sharp double edged swords with which culprits' heads are stricken off in China. Over his face he wore a wooden mask representing distorted features. The culprit was led into the middle of the room and forced on to his knees before him, caught him by his pigtail and drew his head down so that the neck was laid bare to the ax. Then the smock was pulled over his shoulders. The executioner, taking the handle of his sword in both hands, threw himself into position, raised the weapon, swung it high over his head and brought it down. When within more than a hair's breadth from the neck it suddenly stopped. From that point it was slowly and carefully lowered till the edge rested on the culprit's neck. Then he held it that it might not cut the skin.

Now in China, whether from the great power of these societies, from ineffective law, or what not, the culprit's head would have been separated from the body. In America different conditions exist. There are not only judges and juries who do not respect the decrees of Chinese secret societies, but John Chinamen has not pull with them. A headless murder would not only lead to the punishment of those instrumental in it, but would be prejudicial to the continued efforts of thousands of the copper colored brethren in America who are washing hard night and day for a living.

The executioner, after holding the sword upon the culprit's neck for a few moments, removed it and, resting its point on the floor beside him, turned to the judges and said:

"The traitor is dead."

The executed man arose to his feet and looked about him. No one interfered with him for he was dead. No one saw him, for he was dead. He said something to a man near him. The man made no reply. Why should he reply to a dead man The members of the society were arising from their seats and leaving the hall. The decapitated man called to one who had been his bosom friend, but without avail. Death separates the quick and the dead, be they friends or enemies.

Charlie Fung followed the others out into the street. There he saw a poster proclaiming to Chinatown that he had been executed that evening. A policeman, seeing the notice, to him unintelligible, with Chinamen standing about it, wondered what the yellow devils were up to now. Could he have read it he would doubtless have carried a dreadful story to police headquarters. The dead man wandered about like a ghost from the spirit world. No one saw him; no one spoke to him; no one gave him a smile or a frown.

If he had had money he might have returned to China, but would he have fared any better there? Would not an agent of the society he had betrayed follow him and do really the work that had been done figuratively. No Charley was dead, and nothing could bring him to life.

If Charlie was not really dead he was really dying—that is, he was getting into a condition where death would be preferable to life. The posters announcing his execution remained on the walls, and, go where he would in Chinatown, he saw them.

At last Charlie could endure the strain no longer. He wandered off into the "Melican" district an procured a revolver. It was supposed he stole it. Going back among those who had been his fellow Chinamen, he sat down under one of the posters notifying them that he had been executed, put the revolver to his head and effected in reality the execution that they had effected in form.

Not only is it possible to kill a person without doing any bodily harm, but death so inflicted may be made more cruel than any physical torture that has ever been invented. —Helen Inglehart.

LAUGH AND GROW FAT.

Dean Swift declared that he laughed only twice in his life. Once was at an incident in the burlesque of "Tom Thumb" by Henry Fielding, the father of the English novel.

Boston has an 8-year-old boy who feeds on higher mathematics, learns foreign languages four at a time and puts it all over his professors. But this type of juvenile nuisance ought not to be considered an oddity in Boston.

It has been shown that a well-made watch can be frozen into a cake of ice without interfering with its timekeeping qualities. However, the average citizen will prefer to carry his timepiece in the same old way.

A Victim of Leprosy.

"On my travels in Venezuela," said a New York man, "I stayed in a hotel with a young man in whose family there was the taint of leprosy, though he apparently did not have it. One night sitting at dinner he became angry at a waiter and brought his hand down on the table with full force. He instantly realized that he did not feel the blow and sat looking at his hand, his face whitening with horror. 'Give me your knife, Bob,' he said to his chum. He grabbed the pocketknife in a frenzy and stabbed the side of his hand with vicious cuts from finger tip to wrist. You may not know that leprosy appears in the side of the hand, numbness being a sign. The man did not feel the cuts. He arose from the table, knocking over his chair, rushed out into the courtyard of the hotel, and we heard the quick tang of a revolver shot, telling us how he had conquered the leper's curse by ending his life."—New York Times.

An Odd Epitaph.

The following epitaph is to be found in a cemetery within seven miles of New York's city hall:

Reader, pass on; don't waste your time
O'er bad biography and bitter rhyme,
For what I am this crumbling clay insures,
And what I was is no affair of yours.

PASSION PLAY AT OBERAMMERGAU

A Resume of the Play from the Time of Its Inception to the Present Time

As Written by Mrs. Jennie O. Law-Hardy.

Passion Plays or 'Mysteries,' as they were also called, were performed in a more or less primitive fashion, all over Europe, from the 10th or 11th century. Traces of the old custom still survive in many out of the way places, in Italy and Germany, but it is only in Oberammergau, that the play has not only not dwindled to insignificant proportions, or absolutely melted away, but has advanced from a crude representation to the finished and unique performance of to-day.

As far back as the 12th century a Passion Play had been performed in the village, which was similar to those played in many another town and hamlet. But about the beginning of the 17th century, a great plague overspread the country, in consequence of the incessant wars, and Oberammergau was not spared. Regarding this as a visitation from Heaven, the villagers vowed that if they were spared, they and their descendants would perform the Passion Play every 10 years.

"From that hour," says the chronicler, "the plague was stayed."

The first regular performance was therefore held in 1633, but after 1670, the decennial date was adopted for convenience sake.

My mother was a native of Bavaria, and nearly all of her living relatives are still there, I consequently spent time in the country, and our summers were passed amoug the mountains. In 1882, on a walking tour of three or four weeks, I first visited Oberammergau, which was then comparatively little frequented; it was six miles from the nearest railroad, hidden among the mountains. It was not the year of the Play, there only a few tourists there, who for the most part had come on foot like ourselves and there was apparently nothing to distinguish it from hundreds of other mountain hamlets. The peasants, for that is what they are, were haying, milking or tilling the ground, and were hardworking, honest, simple folk.

Yet in 1900, when the newly opened railroad was bringing into the village 4,000 people to every performance, the was hardly any change in the appearance of people, or buildings, except the new theatre, and one or two modest Hotels.

The magnificent scenery, the pretty fertile valley with the clear Ammar flowing through it, dainty honses, and high rugged mountain peaks could not be improved upon, and with the exception of a few new roads and paths there was practically no change.

For the first 40 or 50 years the performance was given in any open field, and the spectators stood all day; later seats were furnished, but still the audience was exposed to the rain and sun, and it is only comparatively recently than any shelter was provided.

The large new Theatre was used for the first time in 1900, and is enclosed on three sides, but open towards the stage for its entire width of 140 feet, and height of about 60 feet, consequently even now in rainy weather the front rows of spectators are drenched, for rain or shine, the performance continues, and the stage is as open as any street.

The stage represents an open space in Jerusalem, with a large Roman building in the middle, whose front consists of a curtain which can be raised and lowered to permit of the preparation of scenery and tableaux, while the perrormance is going on.

On one side this building is joined by an arch to the house of Caiaphas, on the other also by an arch to that of Pilate, to which one ascends by a flight of very wide steps. and which has a large open space on top of the steps. Under each arch a street stretches far back, with houses, trees and palms on either side.

The audience can see the crowds rushings down the streets, before they reach the stage, and one has the illusion of being among the people in the centre of an open space, an eye witness to contemporaneous events. It is in no way to be compared to any other existing theatre, for everything is real, there is no paint, no powder, no false hair; the men taking part have grown their hair and beards for many years before, and in the war of 1870, the only man in the German army who was allowed to wear his hair long, was the Christus of Oberammergau, for the play was postponed to 1871 on account of the war with France.

The costumes have been designed by some of the leading artists and are historically absolutely correct. The gold and silver embroidery is real, and so are the costly jewels on the robes of the High Priests, and the members of the High Council.

Every 10 years the costumes are renewed, and in case of bad weather, the old costumes are worn. The first performance takes place in the middle of May, and continues on every Sunday and Holiday until the middle of September, which gives about 25 performances for the season. In 1900, however, the crowds were so large that an overflow performance was given nearly every Monday in order to accomodate the visitors, thus almost doubling the performances.

The men look exactly like the character they represent, more so than the women, and any day one can pick out in the village, Christ, Peter, John, Judas, etc. pitching hay, or carving wood. Not only must they look like the person they are to portray, but they must also live the life. To play Christus, or Maria, is the greatest earthly glory that can befall an Oberammergauer, and to be chosen, no flaw must be found in their moral life, and even a mild swear word would disqualify for the office.

Likewise with the apostles. One of the Judases was rather fond of drink, and that nearly barred him, but he promised to reform, and did, and he was furthermore one of the best artists, therefore the management finally decided, "that after all, it did not matter so much for Judas" but his failing would have debarred him from the part of any of the other apostles. Several of the Marias have finished their life as nuns.

We visited Anton Lang (Christus), in his little potters shop, he was then only 25 years of age, and he plays the same part again in 1910. Even my German cousins, who had been prejudiced against the play, were won by his sweetness; he whose name and picture were known in every civilized country, was apparantly unspoiled and very modest, and after putting his autograph on his photo for me, he apologized for not writing it better. His father keeps a little inn, in the same building, and was the Herod of the play.

The performance begins at 8 a. m., and continues with an interval of an hour for lunch, until about 5:30 p. m.

There are no intermissions, as one crowd leaves the stage on one side, the performers of the next scene are seen entering from the other street, or there are tableaux. 685 people take part in the play.

It begins with the tableaux of the Creation of Adam and Eve in the Old Testament, the Fall of Man, and the Expulsion of Adam and Eve from Paradise, followed by the Annunciation, the Birth of Christ, and the Flight to Egypt. In like manner the most important events in the Old Testament, with corresponding events in the New Testament are portrayed accompanied by simply magnificent choruses. The speaker of the choir is Josef Mayer, who played Christus for 30 years previously, and whose wonderful voice could have filled a far larger theatre.

The acting commences with the entry of Christ into Jerusalem, and his expelling the traders from the Temple. The ass used is, by the way, the only specimen of his race I ever saw in that section of the country, and we fed him with carrots, and scratched his ears at Anton Lang's stable.

The play follows the Bible absolutely the last supper is an exact representation of Leonardo da Vinci's renowned picture. Pilate washes his hands on the porch before his house, Christ is scourged, and the crown of thorns is crushed on to his head, Christ falls beneath the cross, and Simon of Cyrene is pressed into service, St. Veronica wipes the sweat from the brow of Christ, and the imprint of his face remains on the cloth.

I saw this actual cloth, which was used in the tragedy nearly 1900 years ago, it is now preserved as one of the greatest relics in St. Peters, Rome.

The crucifixion is so realistic as to defy description. the blood rolls down from beneath the crown of thorns, the side is pierced, and the expression of supreme agony mingled with the spiritual beauty on the simple potter's face, could only be portrayed by the greatest artists the world produces, as also the agony of the two thieves.

Anton Lang was 22 minutes and several seconds on the cross the day I was there, 20 minutes the time the doctor saw it; there is real danger in the position, and he has been unconscious when taken down.

The performamce ends with the burial, the angels at the Grave, the Resurrection, the Appearance to Mary Magdalene, and the Ascension, which has a good deal of resemblance to Raphaels picture in the Vatican.

Oberammergau is 43 miles from Munich, and considering what one sees the expense is very moderate. Railway fares range from $2.00 to $7.75 for the return trip, according to class and train, tickets from 50 cents to $2.50, rooms from 75 cents to $1.75, and full hotel board and room is $2.50 for one day. According to the official Regulations of the Wohnungsbureau (Longings office) which I possess, one nights lodging must be paid for or no ticket is issued.

It is therefore possible to witness the Play at a total expense of $4.00 inclusive from Munich, and the most one can spend is $12.75, if one takes ones ticket through the Wohnungsbureau. If one makes ones arrangements through the Tourist agencies, it is possible to pay much more.

However, wherever one, engages one's room and seat, all one receives is a receipt, for the tickets are only issued the day before the performance, to bona-fide visitors, in order to avoid all you receive until the day before.

Intending visitors should write to the Wohnungsbureau for an application form, fill it out and send it with the money and a registration fee of 18 cents, and if no seats are available for the performance desired. they will be allotted to the applicants for the first available date. The arrangements are well nigh perfect and though the traveller who does not speak German, will be at some disadvantage, and not learn as much about the country and its customs as the German scholar, yet he can with the help of the published English version, enjoy the Play to the full as much, with little trouble and compartively little expense.

JENNIE LAW HARDY.

Get Another Copy.

A well dressed man was standing outside a bookseller's shop in Charing Cross road closely examining one of Balzac's works illustrated by Gustave Dore. "How much is this Balzac?" he asked an assistant outside.

"Twenty-five shillings," was the reply.

"Oh, that's far too much. I must see the manager about a reduction," continued the prospective customer, and, suiting the action to the word, he took up the book and went into the shop.

Approaching the bookseller, he took the book from under his arm and asked what he would give for it. "Seven shillings highest offer," he was told.

The offer was accepted, the man took his money and left.

"Well," queried the assistant later, after the man had gone, "were you able to hit it off with the gentleman, sir?"

"Oh, yes. I managed to get another copy of that edition of Balzac for 7 shillings."

Then the bookseller went out to lodge a complaint with the police.—London Telegraph.

"Yes," replied the harsh critic, "and every time your friends look over their hands they seem impatient for a new deal."—Washington Star.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our regular correspondent.)

Since last week the national capital has become a deserted village. Congress, the President, the diplomatic corps and society have all scattered. Simultaneously with the departure of the President and Congress, the point of national interest was shifted to New York when the ex-President returned, and it now appears that where-ever he is there the middle men of the press are gathered together and from that point political news is dispersed. Business will still go on at the national capital, but in an uninspired, humdrum, mechanical way through the $1800 clerks who really know the routine better than Presidents and cabinets and chiefs of bureaus. But until the first or middle of October there will be but little to attract the attention of the public to Washington.

Since the adjournment of Congress two Senators, Daniels of Virginia, and McHenry of Louisiana, have died; one, McCumber of North Dakota, has been re-elected and Representative Gronna of that state has also been elected to the Senate to fill an unexpired term of Johnson of North Dakota, who died shortly after he was elected.

To all appearances there is a slight slump in the insurgency movement. It is announced that Senators Cummins and Dolliver have cancelled lecturing engagements, and the Damon and Pythias relation renewed between the President and the ex-President at Beverly is a straw indicating political accord and peace. Col. Roosevelt's determination to keep his hands off politics has yielded to Gov. Hughes' solicitation and he is mixed in the New York legislative fight with a result that appears to be temporary defeat. It need not, however, be assumed that Col. Roosevelt's personal friendship for President Taft means that he approves his attitude in the Ballinger-Pinchot affair, or that he is not at heart in sympathy with the progressive element of his party.

Those who are giving the subject of the tarriff board investigations attention are of the opinion that the wool and cotton schedules will be brought urgently before Congress at the next session. The President has directed this board to make a careful investigation of all the tarriff schedules, and the board has arranged to do so. Each schedule is to have the attention of experts and it is believed that every special is to be given to the wool schedule and to the cotton schedule It will be remembered that that during the special session fo the enactment of a new tarriff law, the debates brought out the fact that the wool schedule was the most important of all. The most progressive senators of the Republican side were strenuous in their urgency of lower rates. Senator Dolliver of Iowa eloquently assailed the wool schedule. He made the most positive and pronounced statements that under the wool schedule there were all sorts of outrageous abuses. The President himself, while mainly approving the late tarriff legislation as the best that had heretofore been enacted, it is said that nevertheless held that the wool schedule was without defense, and judging by the facts presented to the Senate by Dolliver and others and by the President's known opinion on the subject, it is anticipated that the tarriff board will advise that both the wool and cotton schedules be mended by the reduction of duties.

His Athletic Neighbor.

A young man inmate of a boarding house had been disturbed night after night by the boarder in the next room doing things with a punching bag he'd rigged up in the room some way. At breakfast each morning the young man would look over the crowd and wonder who the bag puncher might be, but there was no one in sight but a bunch of women and eight or ten men with narrow chests and retreating chins. One night he made up his mind to knock on the bag punching roomer's door and ask him to put over his exercise until daylight when all the world's awake. The man might be small enough to bulldoze even with all his athletics. The door opened and there, clad in a tight fitting red jersey, was a robust, buxom woman of perhaps thirty summers.

"And what did you say to her?" the young man was asked.

"I was so startled," replied he, "that I asked what afterward seemed to me the most natural request I could have made. I asked her if she'd lend me a couple of matches."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The Persistency of Colds.

Why is it that we are so heavily subject to colds? Other epidemic diseases—measles, typhoid, scarlet fever, diphtheria—may get hold on us once and there is an end; it is not usual to have any of them twice. We brew in our blood immunity. The poison of the disease evokes in us its proper antidote. Our blood cells make a sort of natural antitoxin and keep it in stock, so that we are henceforth protected against the disease. A well vaccinated nurse, for example, works with safety in a smallpox hospital, where the very air is infective, but her blood is so changed by vaccination that the smallpox cannot affect her. By scarlet fever, again, we are, as it were, vaccinated against scarlet fever. The reaction of our blood against the disease immunizes us. No such result follows influenza or a common cold. We brew nothing that is permanent. We are just as susceptible to a later invasion as we were to the invasion that is just over.—London Spectator

Never Good.

Fogg—That's a bad cold you have, old man. Fenderson—Did you ever hear of a good cold, you idiot?—Boston Transcript.

Our Eccentric Phrases.

Why do we always talk of putting on a coat and vest? Who puts on a coat before a vest? We also say putting on shoes and stockings. Who puts on shoes before the stockings? We also put up signs telling people to wipe their feet when we mean their boots or shoes. And a father tells a boy he will warm his jacket when he means to warm his pantaloons. We are a little eccentric in our phrases at times.

"PLEASE" ON THE 'PHONE.

The 450 girl operators of the Keystone Telephone Company will not say "please" to the subscribers, and the subscribers have been requested not to say "please" to the operators. The word is used here 900,000 times in twenty four hours on the average. —Philadelphia Dispatch.

If this idea could be carried out in every business in the world, what a wonderful saving of time would result! The marvel is that the genius of the Philadelphia telephone company has not thought it out before.

Billions on billions of hours a day could be saved by cutting out all the courtesies of life and reducing everything to the level of the cave-dwellers. Think of how much time could be saved by leaving off the prefix "Mr." in addressing your less intimate friends! No statistician can calculate how much breath could be spared by wives and sweethearts if they would abandon the use of terms of endearment.

The time-saver of the telephone exchange might better have adopted a rule against expletives in denunciation of the usually vexatious service. If the time spent in holding the wire and the time spent in cussing out the operator could be reduced to statistics it probably would make the waste on politeness look trivial. Here is where the most economy of telephone time can be effected.

THE DRUNKARD'S BLACK-LIST.

In Fond du Lac, Wis., there is a portrait gallery which grows apace. It is made up of pictures of the town's habitual drunkards. Every saloon is a branch gallery. Woe and a license forfeited for every saloon-keeper who sells a drink to a man whose face is in the collection, says the New York Times.

From this it is perceived that Fond du Lac is a town which imitates but does not learn. London had the idea of the picture blacklist ordinance in 1903 and discarded it in 1904. It did not work, it never will work. Where there is a determined thirst there is a way which cannot be blocked by a photograph hung on a wall. Besides, the way to cure a curable man of evil is not by trifling with whatever he may have remaining of self-respect.

A town burgess in Pennsylvania, by name Pennypacker, also tried the blacklist scheme a few years ago and promoted chiefly the gayety of the unlisted.

Solon of Athens punished inebriety with death. Lycurgus of Sparta destroyed his vineyard to cut off the wine-bibbers. It is a far cry from these classical examples of heroic dealing with drunkards to the nagging processes of saloon rogues' galleries.

NO OCCASION FOR JEALOUSY.

It is said that King Edward has the most remarkable collection of sticks in the world. But so long as President Roosevelt has the big stick no one will waste any time feeling jealous.—Baltimore American.

That agricultural department employe, who says he has heard birds singing familiar hymns, might as well write out his resignation. But perhaps that is his way of resigning.

The child that is "Ruled by Love" and the child that has its own way live at the same house.

SCOTT'S EMULSION

is the only emulsion imitated. The reason is plain—it's the best. Insist upon having Scott's—it's the world's standard flesh and strength builder.

ALL DRUGGISTS

He Could Wield an Ax.

The skill of the old Maine shipbuilders in the use of the adz and broadax was wonderful. One old time yarn is of a carpenter who applied very drunk at a shipyard for employment. In order to have a little fun with him the foreman set him to give a proof of his skill by hewing out a wooden bolt with no chopping block but a stone. The carpenter accomplished his difficult task without marring the keen edge of the broadax and showed the foreman a neatly made bolt. Then he brought the ax down with a terrific blow that shattered its edge upon the stone. "I can hew fust rate on your chopping block," he hiccoughed, "but I'll be blamed if I can make the ax stick in it when I git through." The story runs that the foreman lost no time in employing such a workman.

Judges' Wigs.

The wig is only worn by English barristers to give them a stern, judicial appearance, and no one can say that it fails in this respect. The custom was originated by a French judge in the seventeenth century when, happening to don a marquis' wig one day, he found it gave him such a stern and dignified appearance that he decided to get one for himself and wear it at all times in court. This he did, and the result was so satisfactory from a legal point of view that not only judges, but barristers also, took up the custom throughout Europe.—London Graphic.

Acquitted.

"Sir!" said the young woman, with what seemed to be indignation.

The young man looked embarrassed.

"Yes, I did kiss you," he admitted, "but I was impulsively insane."

"That means that a man would be a lunatic to kiss me?"

"Well, any man of discretion would be just crazy to kiss you."

This seemed to end the strain, and, no jury being present to muddle affairs, a satisfactory verdict was reached.

Suspicious Routine.

Good Man—Ah, my poor fellow, I feel sorry for you! Why don't you work? When I was young, for ten years I was never in bed after 5—an hour's work before breakfast, then five hours' work, then dinner, then four hours' more work, then supper, then bed, then up again at 5 the next morning—

The last one was read by Mrs. Victor Zahm, and the guests had anticipated what it would contain It was the announcement of the engagement of Miss Edgerton to Mr. Harry Temple, of Tecumseh, Mich., and the date of their wedding September 7th. The verses were decidedly clever and original and greatly enjoyed and appreciated.

The announcement brought forth a shower of best-wishes and congratulations upon the bride-elect who has always been one of the most popular and charming girls in the younger crowd. AMERICANS ABROAD.

Every year we hear that Paris is being "Americanized." To judge from the correspondence cabled or mailed to this country the American colony is the most influential and numerically the most considerable in that capital of civilization. The literal fact, however, as disclosed in the figures printed by the "Matin" is that the American colony is the smallest among all the foreign colonies. Out of 1,033,871 foreigners in France only 6,155 are citizens of the United States, where 330,465 are Italians, 323,360 Belgians, 89,772 Germans and 36,948 English. Even the South Americans exceed us in numbers and, as we suspect, in importance, for the permanent American colony in Paris has practically no men who have borne a constructive part in affairs, while the South Americans include politicians of the first rank.

What is true of France is true of every other foreign country except Canada and Mexico. We hear much of the American colony in England, but it is very small, and so are the American colonies in Germany and Italy. A few artists, a goodly number of students, an occasional woman seeking a title for her daughter or the opportunity of presentation at court offered by the less exclusive of the German monarchies, a considerable number of "smart people"—these constitute the bulk of our expatriate population in Europe. There are also the consuls and their family connection in the capitals, the representatives of the Standard Oil, the Westinghouse interests, the harvester companies, perhaps the shoe companies; but these constitute the merest outline of a foreign quarter.

The fact remains that there is small economic attraction for Americans in Europe. Not yet do their merchants look outward. As a place of residence and business the old world draws only the exceptional few from this country—the student, the leisured, the social butterflies. It knows the American chiefly as the ubiquitous tourist who spends in a few hurried weeks the surpluses of gains made in business here.

BEARS AND BABIES.

Some "philosophic thought" paper has been glorifying the teddy bears because the children's familiarity with them tends to dispel their fear and hatred of animals and make them humane and loving. But in the midst of the applause stirred up by this discovery there comes a clergyman of St. Joseph, Mich., who preaches hotly against the same woozy little toy—for what reason? For the reason, as he sees it, that the attractive and lovable little beasts in the hands of the little girls are "destroying all the instincts of motherhood." The reverend gentleman predicts a worse development of race suicide than ever as a result of the blighting effect of the teddy bear on the maternal feelings of the rising female generation.

This is a very curious idea; probably it will take decades of terrible toil in the child study departments of the universities to determine whether there is anything in it. If we may be permitted a mere conjecture, we should say that exactly the opposite result from that apprehended by the Michigan clergyman is to be expected. It is all a case of "playing mother," anyway; the little girl cultivates the disposition by her tense interest in the toy; and the waning of the teddy bear craze will probably be followed by an unexampled development of the doll business.

And by and by, in her search for the most beautiful forms of diversion, the little girl, grown bigger, substitutes a live man for both doll and teddy bear. This is when the question really arises.

ELECTIVE AFFINITIES.

Chemists first noted the disposition of a substance brought into contact with other substances to cleave to the one for which it has the strongest affinity, says the New York World.

But it is to artists and the possessors of the artistic temperament generally since Goethe's day that we owe the application of the principle to human beings. The fact that the affinity is not always found at the first trial, and usually not until her youthful bloom is seen in contrast with fading charms at home, does not necessarily indicate a defect in the law so much as a lack of opportunities of comparison and selection. A husband familiar with green-rooms may be expected to find his affinity much sooner than the one less favored with facilities.

Usually the affinity is kept in the background until the divorce proceedings make her appearance essential to the interlocutory decree. But if the old reproach that America has sacrificed art to commercialism is not to be deserved, a professional artist should at least be accorded the same privileges in the choice of an affinity as a steel pressure.

AMBASSADORIAL LUXURY.

Some of our innocents abroad appear to be much scandalized by the extravagant style of living displayed by the American Ambassador at the Court of St. James, Whitelaw Reid. They say that though his salary is but $17,500, his house in London must cost him not less than $200,000. This luxury they regard as in shameful contrast with the simplicity of the lives of Franklin and Jefferson when representatives of this country in France. Yet matters and customs have changed since then, even in diplomacy. Franklin and Jefferson were no less honored at the extravagant court of Versailles than if they had expended $200,000 a year, and Whitelaw Reid has no more political consideration with the British Government than if he confined his expenditure to his salary of $17,500. Others have done it before him and have made a very respectable figure in English society.

Whose business is it if Ambassador Reid expend his own money lavishly in dispensing his hospitality as American Ambassador? He does the same thing at home when a private citizen in his splendid residence in Madison Square. Should he be required to change his style of living on his transfer from New York to London and in exchanging his private station for diplomatic post? There is no necessity that his successor should be a millionaire capable of vying with him in expenditure. With his home furnished him an American Ambassador can live very respectably on $17,500 a year, and many good men will be willing to take the position on the same terms.

In the socialistic millennium, one will be able to register at a hotel as "John Doe and affinity."

Sample Helps Frail Women

So many women are dragging out weary lives just because their digestive organs are weak. The result is poor circulation, nervousness and the verge of invalidism. It is often very unnecessary and the woman's own fault.

The first thing to do is to look to the welfare of your bowels. There the trouble usually lies. All physicians know that a large percentage of women are habitually constipated, and from this results indigestion, piles, weariness, etc., that women constantly complain of. But there is no use taking "female remedies" and things of that kind until you have started your bowels to moving. You will find that when the bowels move regularly once or twice a day all your petty ills will disappear. Take a good, mild laxative tonic like Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin for awhile and you will find yourself rapidly getting better and stronger, your bowels will regulate themselves and work at stated times, and then your headaches and dizziness will disappear. Don't take strong cathartic pills or salts, but just such a mild and pleasant-tasting remedy as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin.

You can obtain a bottle of your druggist for fifty cents or one dollar, and either size may be enough to permanently cure you. Thousands of women keep it regularly in the house and will no longer be without it, as it cured them and can be used with safety by every member of the family, down to the youngest child, but if you have never used it take the advice of Mrs. Earl S. Cox, 409 Twenty-fifth street, Moline, Ill., and Mrs. Ellen Dungan, Muncie, Ind., and send to Dr. Caldwell for a free trial bottle, as they did, and learn for yourself what it will do in your own case. That it will cure you, as it did them, there is no doubt.

Dr. Caldwell personally will be pleased to give you any medical advice you may desire for yourself or family pertaining to the stomach, liver or bowels absolutely free of charge. Explain your case in a letter and he will reply to you in detail. For the free sample simply send your name and address on a postal card or otherwise. For either request the doctor's address is Dr. W. B. Caldwell, R.600 Caldwell building, Monticello, Ill.

CRITICISM OF SAMARITAN.

An eminent sociologist, of the school that is extremely tired of "charity," and, for that matter, of most other oldfashioned things, including the political economy of the schools, has ventured to criticise the Good Samaritan as deserving little of the admiration that has for centuries been lavished upon him. Without denying that it was a kindly, and even a commendable, act to go to the assistance of the man who had fallen among thieves the eminent sociologist—it is Dr. Patten in "The New Bases of Civilization"—complains that the Samaritan philanthropist attacked the problem from the wrong end and made no effort, so far as known, to put an end to highway robbery.

What he should have done, according to this authority, was to start, not before attending to the victim's immediate needs, perhaps, but certainly very soon after, an energetic movement for the proper policing and lighting of the road to Jericho. In other words, Dr. Patten things that while the Samaritan may have been what is called a good citizen, there is nothing in the parable to indicate that he was an efficient and therefore really valuable one. He dealt with an effect, but ignored the cause, and therefore his course tended rather toward the encouragement of highway robbery than toward its suppression, since, so far as it went, it prevented the Jericho road from being so strewn with the victims of an evil system that the general public would be aroused to energetic measures.

POISON FOODS.

"How many scores of times is a physician asked in perfect good faith and childlike confidecne, 'Doctor, what is really the best food?' and looked upon with pained surprise when he endeavors to explain that there is no such thing," writes Dr. Woods Hutchinson in an article on "Poison Foods," in McClure's. Dr. Hutchinson evidently entertains little sympathy with the food reformers and prefers to side with the man in the street, who, he says, "as usual, is right." There are a certain number of foods, Dr. Hutchinson maintains, which have become staples all over the world among all races and peoples. These are, broadly, the flesh and milk of three or four domesticated animals, the eggs of one species of domesticated birds; three great grains—wheat, rice and maize—butter, fish, milk and sugar. The attempt to convert into staples what are generally regarded as subsidiary foods such as peas, beans, nuts, cheese, oatmeal, etc.—an attempt which has been tried repeatedly by the diet reformers—has invariably failed. The reason for this, writes Dr. Hutchinson, is only beginning to be seen in the light of recent laboratory experiments. These experiments have revealed the surprising fact that many articles of food contain, combined with their high percentage of nutritive value, substances which, if taken in sufficient quantity, behave as active poisons.

POLICE DOGS.

"Bloodhounds of the police" will have a literal meaning when the Bingham kennels of criminal catchers are officially opened. The plan of putting animal man-hunters on the scent of offenders against the law has been recommended and probably will be adopted, a test already made by the Detective Bureau being called satisfactory. In the suburbs the bloodhound annex to the sleuth department ought to find its largest field of usefulness. Running down the guilty after a chase with dogs through the Subway and up the "L," in the Brooklyn Bridge jam and down the bay on a ferryboat would be attended with too many difficulties.

Whatever success may come from the experiment, it will not be possible for the bloodhounds to catch the scores of murderers whose victims fell years ago and who have gone at large through the failure of the Detective Bureau to persist in the search for them. Nor can the bloodhounds be trained to tell the difference between violators of the law who pay for protection and those who refuse to give up.

DON'T KILL ALL OF THEM.

America has ever been a nation of trappers and hunters, and few wild animals have escaped. The practice of extermination has been a national regret with respect to more than one sort of animal. Recently 100,000 acres has been set aside in Oklahoma for a public park where the bison may enjoy some of his native freedom. Preserves in Maine, New York and several of the western states are caring for deer and elk, but many of the smaller wild animals like the beaver, which would add much to the picturesqueness of our lakes and woods if left unharmed, are now killed wherever seen. Squirrels have come to be protected by public sentiment even in the largest of our cities and many a park or college campus is enlivened by the swift antics of these little animals.—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

Too frequent passages of kidney secretions also annoyed me greatly and the doctor was unable to help me. Doan's Kidney Pills were so highly spoken of that I procured a box and began their use. I was so promptly relieved that I continued taking the remedy until my trouble had disappeared."

About the Baking if you use

CALUMET Baking Powder

When the baking does not come just right you are inclined to blame everything but the real cause. Poor baking powder spoils more food than any other one thing. Try a can of CALUMET and feel easy about your baking. It never fails to produce sweet, delicious food. On account of its great raising power and moderate cost it is the most economical.

Misleading advertisements may have led you to believe that you take baking powder into the stomach in the same form as it is in the can. Here is the truth: In the process of baking the heat causes a chemical reaction in the baking powder which destroys or entirely changes the nature of the original ingredients. Therefore, the original contents of the can or what is printed on the label is no indication of what you get in the food.

In Calumet Baking Powder the ingredients are so scientifically compounded that this chemical reaction leaves no tartaric acid, Alum, Lime or other residue in the food. In a Cream of Tarter or Trust Baking Powder this chemical reaction turns the Cream of Tartar into Rochelle Salts, a drug which should never be taken in food.

CALUMET complies with all pure food laws—both State and National. Your Grocer will guarantee it. If he offers "something just as good," refuse it—insist on having CALUMET and be sure of good baking.

Received highest award World's Pure Food Exposition, Chicago, 1907, which positively proves there is no guesswork about CALUMET, because this award means that it was highest in quality and is absolutely pure.

RAIL STRIKE MAY OCCUR

Trainmen on Pennsylvania Lines Vote Strike or Increase.

Conference Arranged For Today at Which Arbitration Will Be Proposed, It Is Thought.

Philadelphia, July 14. — More than 12,000 trainmen and conductors of the Pennsylvania lines east of Pittsburg, have voted overwhelmingly in favor of a strike if the company does not grant their demands. Similar action was taken by employes on the lines west of Pittsburg. When the count of the vote was completed, the union leaders went to General Manager Myers, told him the result and restated demands.

He "stood pat" on the question of applying the present pay for eleven hours to a day of ten hours, the principal demand of the men. At the request of the union leaders that he consider the matter and meet them at 11 o'clock today to make them a proposition, Mr. Myers agreed, but made no further promise. It was broadly hinted that he will propose arbitration.

The strike vote as reported by A. B. Garretson, president of the Order of Railway Conductors, and W. G. Lee, president of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, showed a total of 14,194 votes cast, with 12,781 in favor of a strike.

FORMER JUDGE IS PAROLED

Abner Smith of Chicago Released from Joliet Prison.

Chicago, July 14.—Freed by his wife's plea, former Judge Abner Smith of the circuit court, who was indicted, convicted and sentenced to the penitentiary for his part in the wrecking of the Bank of America four years ago, is free from Joliet prison.

He was paroled by the state board of pardons on his sixty-seventh birthday. The parole is the board's answer to the unceasing fight for a pardon waged by Mrs. Smith.

CHILD CAUGHT BY A BINDER

Little Boy Has Narrow Escape From Death in Machine.

Bloomingdale, Ind., July 14.—Ronald Williams, the 3-year-old son of Thomas Williams, narrowly escaped death when caught in a binder, at work in an oats field. It was not known that the boy was in the field.

Mr. Williams had been oiling the machine, and just as he resumed his seat started the horses. The child was struck by the reel and thrown backward on the sickle. Both legs were badly cut, but it is thought he will recover.

A Judicial Favor.

A verdant local reporter whose propensities incline to daring rather than to judgment and whose ardency in the quest of news is one of his marked characteristics approached a judge of the United States district court and solicited a little advance information on a case in progress in the judge's court.

"You see, judge," said the youngster to the astonished jurist, "we go to press in a few moments, and we all know your inclination to do a newspaper man a favor."

The venerable man eyed the youth sternly and said slowly and emphatically:

"Yes, young man, I'll do you a favor this time, and you will see that you don't ask me again."

"That's fine, your honor. Thanks, very much. Just a few lines will do."

"I will do you this favor. I shall not send you to jail this time, but if you ever approach me again with such a question your friends will not see you for some time."

The discomfited reporter retired ruminating on the mysteries of the law and the dignities pertaining to the judiciary.—Philadelpha Ledger.

The Exclusiveness of Caste.

An English officer who some years ago was wounded in a battle in India and left lying all night among the native dead and wounded tells this story: "Next morning we spied a man and an old woman, who came to us with a basket and a pot of water, and to every wounded man she gave a piece of joaree bread from the basket and a drink from her water pot. To us she gave the same, and I thanked heaven and her. But the Soobahdar was a high caste Rajput, and, as this woman was a Chumar, or of the lowest caste, he would receive neither water nor bread from her. I tried to persuade him to take it that he might live, but he said that in our state, with but a few hours more to linger, what was a little more or less suffering to us—why should he give up his fate for such an object? No; he preferred to die unpolluted."

The Origin of Oxygen.

That eminent scientist Lord Kelvin maintained that all the oxygen in the atmosphere probably originated from the action of sunlight upon plants. When our earth was a globe of hot liquid it contained no vegetable fuel and probably no free oxygen. But as it cooled off plants appeared on its surface, and these began to evolve oxygen through the medium of the sunbeams. Upon the oxygen thus derived we depend for the maintenance of life by breathing. When we burn coal or other vegetable fuel we use up oxygen, and it is to plants again that we owe the restoration of the oxygen thus lost to the air. If they failed to keep up a sufficient supply the atmosphere would gradually part with its oxygen, and the inhabitants of the earth would disappear in consequence of asphyxiation.

Our Friends.

If we choose our friends for what they are, not for what they have, and if we deserve so great a blessing, then they will be always with us, preserved in absence and even after death, in the amber of memory.—Cicero.

ATTACKS BETHEA WILL

Tenant on Farm Lays Claim to the Land.

Miles Bryan Declares Late Judge, Before Death, Promised to Leave Him the Illinois Farm.

Sterling, Ill., July 14.—Miles Bryan, who was a tenant on the farm owned by federal Judge Solomon H. Bethea for a quarter of a century, has filed a suit in the Lee county circuit court to set aside the will of the judge, by which the farm of 375 acres was bequeathed to the Dixon Public hospital.

Mr. Bryan, in his bill, maintains that William Bethea, father of the judge, told the latter that after the death of the judge the farm was to become the property of Bryan. He maintains also that Judge Bethea, before his death, promised to give him the farm.

Bryan asserts that this promise was made as the result of many kind acts he did for the judge. The bill will be fought by the trustees of the hospital.

MUST BE TAUGHT TO SWIM

Children in Chicago Schools Will Be Given Compulsory Course.

Chicago, July 14.—Mrs. Ella Flagg Young, president of the National Educational association, in an interview declares that children should be taught to swim.

She adds that a compulsory course will soon be introduced in the public schools of Chicago, of which she is superintendent.

The Festive Codfish.

A correspondent of the New York Post says that the codfish frequents "the tablelands of the sea." The codfish no doubt does this to secure as nearly as possible a dry, bracing atmosphere. This pure air of the submarine tablelands gives to the codfish that breadth of chest and depth of lungs that we have so often noticed. The glad, free smile of the codfish is largely attributed to the exhilaration of this oceanic altitoodleum. The correspondent further says that the "codfish subsists largely on the sea cherry." Those who have not had the pleasure of seeing the codfish climb the cherry tree in search of food or clubbing the fruit from the heavily laden branches with chunks of coral have missed a very fine sight. The codfish when at home rambling through the submarine forests does not wear his vest unbuttoned as he does while loafing around the grocery stores of the United States. —Bill Nye.

A High Priced Fricassee.

Lord Alvanley, a noted wit and high liver in England a hundred years or so ago, insisted on having an apple tart on his dinner table every day throughout the year. On one occasion he paid a caterer $1,000 for a luncheon put up in a basket that sufficed a small boating party going up the Thames. Being one of a dozen men dining together at a London club where each was required to produce his own dish, Alvanley's, as the most expensive, won him the advantage of being entertained free of cost. This benefit was gained at an expense of $540, that being the price of a simple fricassee composed entirely of the "noir," or small pieces at each side of the back, taken from thirteen kinds of birds, among them being 100 snipe, 40 woodcocks and 20 pheasants—in all about 800 birds.

Hair Monstrosities.

French theater managers in the eighteenth century had worse evils than picture hats to contend against. Marie Antoinette, who was short even according to French standards, set the fashion of high coiffures, and ultrafashionable women prided themselves on measuring four feet from their chins to the tops of their heads. These structures took about six hours to erect, the hairdresser mounting a ladder in the process. Some coiffures were almost as broad as they were long, with wings sticking out about eight inches on each side of the head. For the "frigate" coiffure the hair was rippled in a huge pile to represent the waves of an angry sea and surmounted by a fully rigged ship. As a consequence of these monstrosities disturbances in theaters occurred almost daily until an ordinance was issued against the admission of women with high coiffures to the floor of the house. —Chicago News.

BALLINGER KEEPS JOB

Says He Is Not Made of Resigning Material.

Secretary of the Interior Arrives at His Seattle Home to Spend His Summer Vacation.

Seattle, Wash., July 14.—Secretary Ballinger arrived here from Washington to spend his summer vacation. The first thing the secretary said upon his arrival was that he had no intention of resigning or of taking any active part in politics in this state in the present campaign.

"It has been frequently stated," the secretary said, "that I intend to resign and that I have moved my household furniture away from Washington. There is absolutely no foundation for any such statement. I am not made of the resigning material and do not propose to gratify those persons who want me to resign. That is not my object in being in office.

"I expect to administer the interior department in a legal manner, which I believe will ultimately receive the approbation of every one."

BALLOON FALLS; FIVE MEN KILLED

Victims Are Oscar Erbsloeh and Four Companions.

ALL ARE FRIGHTFULLY MANGLED

When High in the Air the Big Gas Bag Bursts and Falls to the Earth with Its Cargo of Human Freight.

Leichlingen, Rhenish Prussia, July 14.—Oscar Erbsloeh, the noted German aeronaut, and four companions were killed when the dirigible balloon Erbsloeh burst at a great height and dropped to the earth a crumbled mass.

The dead are Oscar Erbsloeh, inventor and balloonist; Herr Toelle, a manufacturer of Barmen; Engineer Krauz, Engineer Hoeppe and Motorman Spicke.

There have been various opinions as to the height of the craft when the explosion occurred, but it is said to have been about 1,000 feet.

The fatal flight started from Dusseldorf early in the morning and the dirigible swung along before the breeze for forty-five minutes, then observers saw the great gas bag crumple up in mid-air and the car underneath hurtled earthward. Falling from such a great height, the bodies of the five men were so mangled as to be unrecognizable when soldiers and physicians reached the spot. The car itself was shattered to fragments.

The craft was of the nonrigid type, 167 feet in length and 33 feet in diameter. The motors were of 125 horsepower and drove the airship at a speed of twenty-eight and one-half miles an hour.

There were few eyewitnesses of the accident. According to these the start was well made. The Erbsloeh rose gracefully, pushing its way through the fog to a height of several hundred yards. At this altitude a series of evolutions was begun.

Suddenly there was a loud report, and at the same moment the forepart of the balloon crumpled up and the gondola was twisted about until it appeared as though standing on one end.

As the gas escaped from the forward compartment the prow swayed downward. For a flash the airship fluttered like a wounded bird and then fell swiftly to earth. Erbsloeh and his companions were killed the second they struck ground. Their heads were battered in and every bone was broken.

An examination of the wreckage showed that the benzine tank had burst, tearing to shreads the rubber envelope directly above it. The destruction of this envelope caused the bow to collapse. The stern compartment was still filled with gas when it struck the ground.

Oscar Erbsloeh is well known in the United States. In October, 1907, he won the St. Louis balloon races as pilot of the great German balloon Pommern No. 1. Nine balloons and their crews took part in the great contest, which attracted the attention of the world.

With him sailed her highness, the Maharani, and the other members of the royal party. They are on their way to India after a quick trip around the world.

Postmaster General Frank Hitchcock was a passenger on the Mauretania. He said he was going abroad for a rest of a few weeks.

ST. PAUL MEETING MAY CAUSE ROW

Pinchot's Plan for Conservation Congress Is Criticised.

REPUBLICANS FEAR THE RESULT

All Insurgent Speaker Program Is Opposed by Gov. Eberhart and Other Minnesota Leaders—Conference in Chicago Today.

Washington, July 14.—A merry row has started over the Conservation congress, scheduled to meet in St. Paul on Sept. 6, and the Minnesota city may withdraw its invitation to Gifford Pinchot and his followers. This situation has been presented by the action of Mr. Pinchot and his associates in making up a program of speeches for the congress which the local managers believed will stir up trouble and possibly react on the Republican party in the state primaries to be held in September.

According to information obtained here, Gov. Eberhart and other Republicans in Minnesota are all "Het up" over the prospect. A few weeks ago they were tickled over having landed the big congress, but now they are going around under the impression that they have a good big "white elephant" on their hands. Col. Roosevelt is one of the speakers that Mr. Pinchot has on his list.

The local St. Paul managers of the congress have given notice that they will not stand for an "all insurgent" program such as they declare has been prepared by Pinchot. The controversy is to be thrashed out at conference in Chicago today. Pinchot has already left for Chicago and he will be joined there today by B. N. Baker, president of the congress; J. B. White, another officer, and Thomas B. Shipp, secretary of the National Conservation association, who has taken an active part in making preparations for the St. Paul affair.

The conservationist will be met in Chicago by Gov. Eberhart and other anxious Republicans from Minnesota. The issue is to be settled at the Chicago conference and if the conservation officials stand pat on the insurgent program, the congress will not be held in St. Paul.

Minnesota Republicans are anxious to have the conservation congress held in St. Paul, but are ready to protest with great heat against the presentation of speakers who, they believe, may stir up controversies that would in all probability be ventilated in the primaries. Among the speakers to whom exception has been taken by the St. Paul men are Louis D. Brandeis, who represented L. R. Glavis as attorney before the congressional joint committee on inquiry into the Ballinger-Pinchot affair., and Editor William R. Nelson, of the Kansas City Star. Messers. Brandeis and Nelson are carrying a lot of anti-Taft sentiment on their chests and the St. Paul board of managers are apprehensive that they plan to unload it at St. Paul.

New York, July 14.—William K. Vanderbilt Jr. was appointed assistant to President William C. Brown of the New York Central lines, at a meeting of the Central's directors. Mr. Brown said that for the last year or two he had used Mr. Vanderbilt a great deal in making investigations of different matters and in assisting him generally in his work.

Mr. Vanderbilt is a director of thirty-two corporations and last month was elected to the directorate of the Central itself. He is also a vice president of the New York State railways, a branch of the Central, that controls trolley lines along the Mohawk valley.

COL. ROOSEVELT FOR PARTY PEACE

Ex-President States His Position in New York Fight.

WILL SEEK OUT THE BEST MAN

Candidate Most Acceptable to the Rank and File of Republican Party Will Receive Help of the Former President.

Oyster Bay, N. Y., July 14.—The departure of Gov. Hughes from Sagamore Hill after a political conference with Col. Roosevelt, which is certain to have an important bearing on the state situation in New York this fall, was followed by the appearance of Timothy L. Woodruff, chairman of the Republican State committee. One of several prominent state politicians whom the colonel has seen in the past two days, Mr. Woodruff came to tell his side of the story. His view point is not the same as that of the governor, according to the colonel. In the course of an interview Col. Roosevelt said that he is seeing both sides. This is true, not only in regard to the state situation, but regarding the national situation. The colonel is cautiously feeling his way and has not made up his mind as to what stand he will take, either in the state or towards the administration. While there have been a preponderance of insurgents flocking to the hill, Mr. Roosevelt has mixed the others in so as to puzzle even the wisest.

Neither Gov. Hughes nor Col. Roosevelt said anything positive concerning their conference. Both admitted that they discussed politics, but the colonel said himself that it was only natural in relation to the gubernatorial nomination.

Mr. Roosevelt said he had a delightful visit with Gov. Hughes. They talked about many things that they have wanted to discuss for a long, long time, but not for publication yet. They went over the whole political business from beginning to end.

"Did you discuss the names of candidates with Gov. Hughes?" the colonel was asked.

"Almost every visitor brings the name of at least one candidate," he replied evasively, "and many of them are very worthy men."

"What part are you going to have in the selection of a candidate?"

"I don't know whether I shall have any hand in selecting a governor. My position in regard to the governorship this fall," he said, "is that we must find the man best fitted for the office and most acceptable to the rank and file of the Republican party and to the independent voters." The colonel added: "And I intend to do everything in my power to see that such a man is elected."

NEW WEBSTER STORY.

Illustrating the Statesman's Views of Trade.

The incident in the life of Daniel Webster given by Dr. Hale under "Notes and Queries" in the Transcript, not long ago, reminds me of another mood in the life of that distinguished man which was related to me by the late Joshua Seward. Mr Seward came to Woburn from Boston in the early seventies and bought the farm now owned by E. C. Coleman, where he lived until his death in 1899. He was a native of the "Peace City," N. H., from which place he came to Boston in his early manhood and later engaged in the livery business off School street on land now covered by the rear part of the Parker House. He was a genial, social, active young man, and in a short time many of the business and professional men of the city were his friends and patrons. Daniel Webster, then in the fullness of his masterly manhood, was his particular friend and most favored patron. One year Webster was early engaged to deliver the Fourth of July oration in the city.

A public procession was then an important feature of the celebration, and the orator of the day was the chief person of distinction in the parade. In those days there were no four-wheeled vehicles for convenience or for pleasure. A chaise was the proper carriage for gentlemen to use. Webster was popular and proud as popular. He saw no chaise in the city as good as he desired to appear in on that important occasion, and, therefore, he ordered one to be built by the principal carriage maker of the city (Sargent, I think it was), to be ready for use on that day. In the morning of the Fourth he appeared at Seward's stable office and requested Seward to go to the carriage shop and get the chaise he had ordered. Seward harnessed a horse and went to the carriage shop as directed, and told the proprietor he had come for Mr. Webster's chaise. The proprietor, in firm and measured tones that could not be misunderstood, asked: "Did Mr. Webster send the money to pay for the chaise?"

In relating this to me Seward said: "I was never so astonished in my life! I should have been less surprised if he had raised his fist and knocked me down! I had no thought that there was a man living who had ever heard of the great Webster, the godlike Daniel, who would or who could have denied him any request it was possible to grant. I could only say: 'He sent no money by me.' 'Then,' said the proprietor, 'tell him he can have the chaise when he sends the money to pay for it, and not till then.'" Seward said he was never in such a dilemma in all his life. He could not go back and tell that great man, whom he adored, that he could not have the chaise till he paid for it. And yet he must go back and tell him something. But what could he tell him? Finally, after much thought and study it occurred to him that he had a new chaise which he would offer to Webster and tell him that the varnish on the one he had ordered was not yet hard, and that it would be liable to injury if taken out in the heat and dust of that public day. Webster met Seward at the door when he returned and before Webster could ask a question Seward was telling him the story he had invented on the way home. Webster made no reply, but accepted Seward's statement as true, and rode in his chaise that day.

About a week later Webster came again and said to Seward, "I think the varnish on that chaise is hard now and you may go down and get it." Seward said, "With a heavy heart I harnessed a horse and went again to the shop. I knew I should not get the chaise and I was not disappointed. In the same manner I was asked the same question as before. I could not invent another story that would be credible and was, therefore, compelled to go back and tell him the truth." Webster was impatiently waiting Seward's return, and when in hailing distance he called to Seward in a tone of voice that indicated surprise, "Where is the chaise? What is the trouble?" Seward approached him more closely and in tones so low that no one about could overhear him replied, "He told me to tell you that you could have the chaise when you send the money to pay for it and not before." Webster stood silent an instant, and then with voice trembling with emotion, exclaimed, "My God, Joshua, did he say that?" and sank into a nearby chair and cried as would a deeply aggrieved child of six summers.

Seward said, in conclusion: "I have seen him in church, standing during prayer as was the custom then, among his neighbors and friends with that massive head uncovered, looking more like a god than a man; I have seen him on the platform swaying strong men by the majesty of his presence and the power of his oratory, and I have seen him in his weakness, almost helpless, pitiable, his face flushed with grief and wet with tears of anguish. Yes, I have seen him in all his moods, and yet I have never seen another man who could compel so much of my love and my admiration as New Hampshire's greatest son, Daniel Webster."—H. C. Hall in Boston Transcript.

What Johnny Had.

As a reward for good behavior, Johnny was allowed to come to the dinner table when company was expected. He wanted to appear big, too, so he chose a low chair which brought his mouth just to the top of the table. But he didn't mind this, because it was on a line with his plate, and he was not so likely to drop anything while eating. He ate ravenously of everything, having nothing to say to the guests, as his mother had told him to remember that good children are seen, not heard. Finally, after dessert, when there was a lull in the conversation, he exclaimed:

"Dad, you can't guess what I've got under the table?"

"No, my son," said the father, with an indulgent glance; "what is it?"

"Stomach-ache!" shouted Johnny, gleefully.

Mrs Mary E. Hause

Again we have to record the passing away of one of our residents and dear friend, Mrs. Mary Hause widow of Dr. Elmer Hause who resided in Tecumseh a number of years. Mrs. Hause died at the home of her daughter Mrs. Eva Satterlee in Kansas City, Mo., after a brief illness of only one week, the remains were brought to Tecumseh for interment and Saturday evening were laid to rest in Brookside.

Mrs. Hause was an active worker in the Methodist Church for many years and was always a fasthful member of the W. C. T. U.. For a number of years she and the Dr. were in Florida and there she was called upon to part with her companion of years, later she went to live with her children who are left to mourn her loss.

See had planned to spend the summer in Tecumseh but failing strength made her change her plans. She will be mourned by many who loved her in Tecumseh.

LO! THE POOR INDIANS

The papers about now are making mention of the fact that this year marks the 71st since the last Indians left these parts.

In 1839 Chief Bawbeese and his Pottawatomie braves, squaws and papoose were in the neighborhood since called Squawville 7 miles southwest of Hudson and from here they were evicted later by the detachment of U. S. troops. While the officer was serving the papers on Bawbeese the others were lined up and sorted out the squaws and papooses being loaded into wagons and the Indian braves marched with the soldiers to the reservation, most of the remments of the tribe are in Oklahoma.

On the farm of the late Chas. Davis west of Clinton an old oak tree stood for many years marking the spot where Bawbeese and his tribe held council and his father who kept a tavern just across the road had many a visit with them.

FIRE!

An alarm of fire on Friday afternoon proved to be in a meadow of new mown hay. The crowd turned out nobly fighting fire with anything that came to hand, but in spite of their best efforts between 20 and 25 tons of hay were destroyed. Hugh Hanna was the unfortunate loser. It was a narrow escape for the houses and but for the good work done, the loss might have been much greater.

THE NATIONAL TEACHINGS OF BROOKLYN TABERNACLE BIBLE STUDIES

CONFESSING THE SON OF GOD.

Matthew 16:13-28.—July 17.

"Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God."

OUR Master, wisely and with becoming modesty, hesitated to declare his own greatness. He allowed his actions to speak and to tell to his disciples that he proceeded and came forth from God, and that in the performing of miracles, and particularly in his teachings, he was the finger of God and his mouth-piece. John the Baptist was sent to be his special fore-runner. It was he that declared that Jesus was "the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world." It was he that declareth that the Master was so much greater than himself that he was not worthy to stoop down and loose the Master's sandals.

But after John had borne him witness, testifying, "This is he," and had declared that he saw the holy Spirit descending upon Jesus like a dove, and that this was a sign given him whereby he might know his Messiahship, then came the time for the Master to bring the matter pointedly to the attention of his followers. John had been cast into prison and later had been beheaded. John's prophetic testimony was fulfilled, when he said of Jesus, "He must increase, but I must decrease." The mission of Jesus and his Apostles became [illegible] day, and those who had formerly talked about John were now asking respecting Jesus, whether he was a prophet sent of God, or whether he was the Messiah. Do the rulers indeed know whether this is the Messiah or not? Surely "no man could do the miracles which he doeth unless God be with him" in some special manner.

Our Lord first inquired respecting the general opinion of the people concerning himself. He did this, not because of his own ignorance, but that he might draw out the thoughts of his disciples. They replied that some thought he was John the Baptist; others supposed he was one of the prophets. The ideas of the heathen were gradually making inroads upon the Jews. The doctrine of reincarnation, wholly unscriptural, is suggested in these answers. All the answers, of course, were wrong, for the prophets were all dead and could not reappear until the resurrection. Then our Lord pointedly put the question to his chosen followers: "Who do ye say that I am?" The courageous St. Peter promptly answered as spokesman for the whole company, "Thou art the Christ [Messiah], the Son of the living God." This was the very answer designed to be brought forth. It was the truth, but our Lord hesitated to present it, because it would better come from the disciples themselves and then have his endorsement. His answer to St. Peter was, "Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona, for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven."

It was not that St. Peter had experienced a special vision or revelation, but such a great spiritual fact as was then under consideration, at that time could be appreciated only by those who were specially favored of the Father. Indeed, it is evident that the same principle still operates, for we read, "No man can come unto me, except the Father which sent me draw him." Our primary drawing and calling is of the Father up to the time when we accept his grace in Christ and make our consecration to do his will and receive the spirit of adoption into his family as God's children; we are then put into the school of Christ to learn of him. Let us learn the lesson that the special blessings always come, not only from believing in Christ, but also from confessing to and before others.

According to the Greek, our Lord replied to Peter, "Thou art a stone, and upon this rock will I build my Church." The rock upon which the Church is built is this confession which St. Peter made. St. Peter himself was not the rock, but he was one of the living stones built by faith upon the rock of truth. It was this same Apostle who so beautifully explained the whole matter, assuring us that all consecrated believers are "living stones" in the temple of God, whose foundation and cap stone is Christ, in whom we are builded together through the operation of the holy Spirit.—1 Peter 2:4-7.

The expression, "Upon this rock I will build my Church and the gates of hell [hades] shall not prevail against it," is one that is much misunderstood. The gates of hell are not gates to some place of torture, nor gates to purgatory. They are, in the Greek, "gates of hades," and hades signifies a state or condition of death. The passage might well be translated, "The gates of the grave shall not prevail against it." That is to say, Christ Jesus invites the Church to die with him, to share in his sacrifice, in his death, and while, apparently, the gates of hades have prevailed against the Church, against God's people, for more than eighteen centuries, nevertheless, we have the assurance that they shall not forever prevail. The Master's assurance is that by his death he has become Lord of all and has the keys of death and hades. He has the right to open hades, the tomb, and to call forth all who have gone down into it. He assures us that he will do this, as he says, "All that are in their graves shall hear the voice of the Son of man and shall come forth."

Nevertheless, for all these centuries it has required faith to believe that, by dying with Christ, his followers shall yet live with him—that sharing with him in his death they shall yet share with him in his resurrection to the glory, honor and immortality of the Divine nature. So, then, our Lord's words mean that there will be a resurrection from the grave, and since the Church is to be "a kind of firstfruits unto God of his creatures" (James 1:18; Revelation 14:4), her resurrection means, indirectly, this result, the uplifting of mankind, the opening of the grave to every member of the human family.

The giving of the "keys" of the Kingdom to St. Peter has no reference to locks and bars of heaven, over which St. Peter is the custodian. The Church in the present time is the Kingdom of Heaven in its preparatory or embryotic state, and St. Peter was privileged to do the opening work to the Gospel Church. He opened the door to the Jews at Pentecost, when, as the mouthpiece of the Lord, he proclaimed the meaning of the Pentecostal blessing and the hopes then open to every Jew coming, individually into membership in Christ. He used the second "key" to open the same kingdom privileges to the Gentiles, in that when the due time came for Cornelius, the first Gentile convert, to be received, St. Peter did the work. By preaching to Cornelius the Gospel and by baptizing him into Christ he threw open the door to the Gentiles, as our Lord foretold in the words of this lesson.

St. Peter's commission that whatever things he should bind on earth should be bound in heaven and what things he should loose on earth should be loosed in heaven, is the same that was given to the other Apostles. (See Matthew 18:18.) It does not mean, of course, that the Lord has turned matters over to St. Peter and made him Lord of heaven and earth, nor that any or all of the Apostles were so honored. It simply means this: God purposes to use his Apostles and to so hold up their hands, in all their affairs, that the whole Church may have confidence in them, and may recognize their teachings as of God. If they declared that certain of the commandments under the Jewish law were not binding upon Christians, we must know that their statements were true, and that, similarly, in heaven, the release or change is recognized. And if they bound certain doctrines and teachings, we must know that those are bound and firmly established in heaven. In other words, we must recognize the Apostles as God's inherent mouthpieces.

The time for proclaiming Jesus as the Messiah did not come until after his death and resurrection. Indeed his Messiahship properly dates from his resurrection. He desired his disciples to recognize him properly, and he explained to them about his approaching death and resurrection, but he did not wish them to proclaim this to the world until the due time. St. Peter, perhaps elated with the Lord's commendation of his previous speech, undertook now the role of teacher to the one whom he had just acknowledged as the Messiah. In this he erred. It was in sympathy that he urged that the Master should not think of any steps which lead to suffering and death, but should rather of prosperity and earthly favor, yet our Lord's reproof was pointed. He said: You are my adversary, Peter, when you thus speak to me. You will thus endeavor to dissuade me from doing my Father's will, to hinder me from drinking the cup which my Father has poured for me; your counsel is that common to the world and not of God.

Similarly, the followers of Jesus sometimes need to resist their friends, who thus offer counsel contrary to Divine will and word and providence. These should not be encouraged nor their advice followed. They need correction from their fellow disciples, as did St. Peter.

The words of Peter furnished the Master an opportunity for calling the attention of his followers to the terms of discipleship. Not only must the Master himself suffer, but all of his followers likewise. This course was provided for every one, and whoever would flee from it would lose the eternal life hoped for. Whoever would take up his cross and follow the Master to death would thereby make sure of his share in eternal life on the heavenly plane. His disciples had already pledged their earthly lives, and for them to withhold them for worldly advantage, would mean that they would lose their souls, their lives. This is not true of the world in general, but merely of the Church, called to be of the elect, Royal Priesthood.

He then assured them of his second coming, when he would come in the glory of the Father and with his angels (messengers)—not again as a man—as a sacrifice. At the time of his second coming he would reward every one of his followers according to the faithfulness of each. He concluded this reference to the coming Kingdom by the assurance that some of them would have an ocular demonstration of his coming power and glory before they would die. This we will consider in our next study.

DETROIT IN 1836

EXTRACTS FROM THE DAIRY OF HARRIET MARTINEAU, A NOTED ENGLISH AUTHOR OF THE VICTORIAN PERIOD

Describing a Journey from Detroit to Chicago, on an Extended Trip Through the United States.

Harriet Martineau was a noted English author of the early Victorian era. In the thirties she spent two or three years in America and wrote two books about her travels in this country. The portion of her diary describing her journey from Detroit to Chicago, here reproduced, furnishes an interesting contrast to conditions of today.

We landed at Detroit, from Lake Erie, at 7 o'clock in the morning of June 13, 1836. We reached the American just in time for breakfast. At that long table I had the pleasure of seeing the healthiest set of faces that I had beheld since I left England. The breakfast was excellent, and we were served with much consideration, but the place was so full and the accommodations of Detroit are so insufficient for the influx of people who are betaking themselves thither, that strangers must patiently put up with much delay and inconvenience until new houses of entertainment are opened. We had to wait till nearly 1 o'clock before any of us could have a room in which to dress.

Wooden planks laid on the grass form the pavement in all the outskirts of the place. The deficiency is of stone, not of labor. Paving stones will be imported here, I suppose, to the great improvement of the health and comfort of the place. The wood block pavement, of which trial has been made in a part of Broadway, New York, is thought likely to answer better at Detroit than any other kind, and is going to be tried.

The society of Detroit it very choice; and as it has continued so since the old colonial days through the territorial days, there is every reason to think it will become under its new dignities, a more and more desirable place of residence.

We had two great pleasures this day; a drive along the quiet Lake St. Clair, and a charming evening party at General Mason's. After a pilgrimage through the state of New York, a few exciting days at Niagara, and a disagreeable voyage along Lake Erie, we were prepared to enjoy to the utmost the novelty of a good evening party; and we were as merry as children at a ball. It was wholly unexpected to find ourselves in accomplished society on the far side of Lake Erie, and there was something stimulating in the contrast between the high civilization of the evening and the primitive scenes that we were to plunge into the next day.

The scenery of Lake St. Clair was new to me. I had seen nothing in the United States like its level green banks with trees slanting over the water, festooned with vine; groups of cattle beneath them; the distant steamboat scarcely seeming to disturb the grey surface of the still waters. This was the first of many scenes in Michigan which made me think of Holland; though the day of canuls has not yet arrived.

June 15. An obliging girl at the American provided us with coffee and biscuits at half past five, by which time our "exclusive extra" was the door. Charley had lost his cap. It was impossible that he should go bareheaded through the state; and it was lucky for us that a store was already open where he was furnished in a trice with a willow hat.

The brimming river was bright in the morning sun; our road was, for a a mile or more, thronged with Indians. Some of the inhabitants of Detroit, who knew the most about their dark neighbors, told me they found it impossible to be romantic about these poor creatures. We, however, could not help feeling the the excitement of the spectacle when we saw them standing in their singularly majestic attitudes by the roadside or on a rising gaoünd; one with a bunch of feathers tied at the back of the head: another with his arms folded in his blanket; and a third her infant lashed to a board and thus carried on her shoulders. Their appearance was dreadfully squalid.

As soon as we entered the woods, the road became as bad as, I suppose, roads ever are. Something snapped and the driver cried out that we were "broke to bits." Our gentlemen and these of the mail stage, which happened to be at hand, helped to mend the coach; we ladies walked on, gathering abundance of flowers and picking our way along the swampy corduroy road. In less than an hour the stage took us up and no more accidents happened before breakfast. We were abundantly amused while our meal was preparing at Danversville. One of the passengers of the mail stage took up a violin and offered to play us. Books with pictures were lying about. The lady of the house sat by the window fixing the candle wicks into the moulds. In the piazza sat a party of emigrants who interested us much. The wife had her eight children with her, the youngest, puny twins. She said she had brought them in a wagon four hundred miles and if they could only live through the one hundred miles that remained before they reached her husband's lot of land she hoped they might thrive; but she had been robbed the day before of her bundle of baby things. Some one had stolen it from the wagon.

After a good meal, we saw the passengers stowed into a lumber wagon; and we presently followed in our more comfortable vehicle. Before long something else snapped. The driver was mortified, but it was no fault of his, Juggernaut's car would have "broken to bits" on such a road.

We went into a settler's house, where we were welcomed to rest and refresh ourselves. Three years before the owner had bought his eighty acres of land for a dollar an acre. He could now sell it for twenty dollars an acre. He shot, last year, a hundred deer, and sold them for three dollars apiece. He and his family need have no fears of poverty.

We dined well nine miles before reaching Ypsilanti. The log houses—always comfortable when well made being easily kept clean, cool in summer and warm in winter—have here an air of beauty about them. The hue always harmonizes well with the soil and vegetation. Those in Michigan have the bark left on and the corners were sawn off close and are thus both picturesque and neat.

At Ypsilanti I picked up an Ann Arbor newspaper. It was badly printed but its contents were pretty good and it could happen nowhere out of America that so raw a settlement as that at Ann Arbor, where there is difficulty in procuring decent accomodations, should have a newspaper.

It was past seven before we left the inn at Ypsilanti to go thirteen miles further. We departed on foot. There was a bridge building at Ypsilanti; but till it was ready all vehicles had to go a mile down the waterside to ferry while the passengers generally preferred crossing the footbridge and walking on through the wood. We found in our path lupius, wild geraniums, blue-eye grass, blue iris, wild sunflower and many others. The mild summer night was delicious after the fatigues of the day. I saw the youngest of golden moons and two bright stars set before we reached Wallace's tavern where we were to sleep. Of course we were told that there was no room for us but by a little coaxing and management and one of the party consenting to sleep on the parlor floor every thing was made easy.

Sixteenth. We were off by half past six and not having rested quite enough and having the prospect of fourteen miles before breakfast, we, too, with one accord, finished our sleep in the stage. We reached Tecumseh by half past nine and perceived that its characteristic was chair-making. Every other house seemed to be a chair manufactory. One bore the inscription "Cousin George's Store," the meaning of which I do not pretend to furnish. Perhaps the idea is, that purchasers may feel free and easy as if dealing with Cousin George. Everybody has a Cousin George. Elsewhere we saw a little hotel inscribed "Our House," a prettier sign than "Traveler's Rest" or any other tempting invitation that I am acquainted with.

BASE BALL

TECUMSEH'S OPENING GAME

Tecumseh Independents, who last year garnered a long string of victories over teams in neighboring towns as well as a number from abroad, have reorganized and played their opening game with Onsted this afternoon winning by a score of 8 to 1. Leonardson was in the box for Tecumseh and proved a puzzle to the visiting batsmen, who made but two hits off him, and but for an error of Rogers he would have had a shutout. The Independents played with much of their old time ginger and promise soon to settle down to their former gait.

When signing for baseball it would be quite a scheme to have a code in polite language to be used by the umpire and others as a game progresses, as very few would be willing to choose the only other alternative, silence.

* * *

Adrian baseball circles are disturbed over the resignation of the Manager of their team, this will not be accepted but places then in an unpleasant situation as if he quits Adrian he cannot play ball as he is under a players contract the same as the other players.

BAND CONCERTS

Every Wednesday Evening

The merchants and the band have made arrangements for a series of concerts to be given on the main street. The first was given on last Wednesday night and they will be continued throughout the summer every Wednesday night, weather permitting. The program will be given to the papers Tuesday morning so the public may be informed in advance.

The band is considerably encouraged by their treatment and is making an earnest effort to please. They have invested in some new music of the best character, the kind which never grows old, and will attempt to render one of the selections at each concert. Some of the members, who are competent to play solos will be heard from time to time. An effort is also being made to interest some of the local singers and it is hoped to produce vocal music with band accompaniment in the near future.

The members of the band appreciate the liberality of our merchants and will try to make the programs so interesting as to be worthy of coming a long distance to hear them. Thereby making weekly summer night concerts a permanent affair, at the same time building up a first class amateur band.

JOLLY SIXTEEN

The Jolly 16 who met at the home of Mrs. O. G. Hunt on Tuesday evening proved the name and had a jolly evening.

Four tables of progressive pedro were played, Mrs. Will Barrett taking first prize and Mrs. Vern Barrett second. The club then presented Mrs Maitland Hicks, the guest of honor, with a table spoon with regrets that she was to leave Tecumseh for her new home in Pontiac. Brick cream and wafers were served and goodnights were said at a late hour.

There is always something kind you can do for some one. It need not cost a cent.

FARM WORK BY PRISONERS.

"Realizing that crime in many instances is the result of early environment, which made the criminal what he is, the Danish government takes a paternal interest in those who are brought within the charge of the prison authorities," said Eric Herland, a lumber merchant of Traverse City, Mich., who has been on a visit to his native land, Denmark.

"Denmark still possesses in the heaths of Jutland a large undeveloped territory that requires much labor to make it suitable for agricultural purposes," continued Mr. Herland. "Of late years, however, many farms have begun to dot this Jutland landscape. Through persistent efforts trees are now in evidence where formerly the heaths were barren except for unbroken stretches of ling. Acres of grain bearing soil have replaced the tough undergrowth that was good for nothing but the torch.

"The work of reclaiming the Danish heaths has been accomplished largely through the co-operation of the Danish prison authorities and individuals who wished to embark in farming on their own account and had no means of buying ground. In such instances every inducement is offered the agriculturist to become the owner of a plot of ground on the heath. For him to break up the earth single handed and start business would be a physical impossibility. It is here the prisoners do the preliminary work.

"A freedom which will not infringe on the regulations necessary to keep up discipline is enjoyed by the prisoners on the Danish heath, but the work is no child's play. Severe as is the labor, however, seldom is a prisoner heard to complain, for if such complaints should reach the ears of the officials the convict would at once be deprived of this semi-liberty and returned to the confinement of the prison. The average human being loves liberty too well to voluntarily exchange it for the prison cell.

"An important adjunct is found in the large dogs which are a feature of the prison colony on the heath. There is little doubt that these four footed guards inspire respect."—Washington Post.

Free Dyspepsia Sample

Sufferers from indigestion are waking up to the fact that peppermint lozenges, charcoal and "dyspepsia cures" are only makeshifts in the cure of so troublesome a complaint as chronic indigestion. What is required is something that will not only relieve but which will tone and train the digestive apparatus to again do its work normally, and this these simple remedies cannot do.

There is something more to the cure of indigestion than sweetening the breath, and yet a remedy that only contains digestive ingredients will not cure permanently, as the basis of indigestion is poor bowel circulation, and that requires a scientific laxative. We know of no remedy that combines these requirements better than Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, which has been sold for a quarter of a century.

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is a laxative tonic, a scientific blending of natural ingredients for the cure of constipation, indigestion, liver trouble, sour stomach, sick headache and similar complaints. Its ingredients will so strengthen and tone the stomach and bowel muscles that they will again do their work naturally, and when that has been accomplished your trouble is over. Fannie Stuart, Staunton, Va., was a long-time sufferer, as was O. Tuck, Blackburn, Mo., and they both found their cure with this remedy. They became convinced that pills and tablets, salts, "dyspepsia cures," etc., were at best only temporary relifs. They first accepted Dr. Caldwell's offer of a free sample bottle, which he willingly sends to anyone who forwards name and address. Later, having convinced themselves through the free sample, they bought Syrup Pepsin of their druggist at fifty cents and one dollar a bottle.

Dr. Caldwell personally will be pleased to give you any medical advice you may desire for yourself or family pertaining to the stomach, liver or bowels absolutely free of charge. Explain your case in a letter and he will reply to you in detail. For the free sample simply send your name and address on a postal card or otherwise. For either request the doctor's address is Dr. W. B. Caldwell, R.500 Caldwell building, Monticello, Ill.

COST OF LIVING.

A very reassuring publication is made by the bureau of Labor at Washington, giving tables of statistics to show that the percentage of increase in the wages of labor is greater than that of the cost of food. The computation is ingenious, even if obscure and unconvincing. But the main consideration, in accepting or rejecting the conclusion, is that our people do not subsist on statistics as a regular diet, and that the butcher and grocer and baker do not base their price lists upon the per cent of averages. Every housewife knows, better than the Washington statistician, whether the weekly wages buy as much as they used to buy.

COFFEE FOR BREAKFAST.

While I am an earnest advocate of tea-drinking, as against the reckless overuse of coffee, there is one thing about the bean that appeals to my soul, my heart and my imagination. That is the merry sound of the matutinal mill grinding its cheerful grind, converting the bean into grounds for the morning meal. It is a certain sign that breakfast is coming. I set my watch daily by my neighbor's coffee mill. I smell the boiling beverage and then—take my tea. To a man with a sound stomach nothing on this grand old footstool is more appealing than the fragrance of coffee, fried ham, not rolls! 'Nuff ter mek er burro run away.—Tip.

AUTOMOBILE SLAUGHTER.

The number and frequency and fatality of automobile accidents are appalling. Not a day passes without an addition to the mortuary record. And the peculiarity of it all is that the "scorchers" are the victims in the great majority of cases. The number of innocents slain by the speed maniacs is comparatively small.

We doubt, however, that this looks to reform in the use of power vehicles. Other people have learned how to get out of the way; the scorchers have not learned how to take care of themselves.

But we are in a transition period, and before long it will be brought about that the perils of riding in an automobile are no greater than those of the pedestrian who gets in the way of these machines.—Boston Post

Some Tecumseh People Fully Realize It Now

When the back aches from kidney ills.
When urinary troubles annoy you.
There's a certain way to find relief;
A sure way to be cured.
Doan's Kidney Pills will do it.

Tecumseh people endorse this claim.

Mrs. Jeanett Teachout, N. Oneida street, Tecumseh, Mich., says: "I again take pleasure in recommending Koan's Kidney Pills to persons afflicted with kidney trouble. Last fall my kidneys became disordered and I suffered from pains in the small of my back. If I stooped sharp twinges seized me and for a few seconds I was unable to straighten. Too frequent passages of kidney secretions also annoyed me greatly and the doctor was unable to help me. Doan's Kidney Pills were so highly spoken of that I procured a box and began their use. I was so promptly relieved that I continued taking the remedy until my trouble had disappeared."

MAKING UP THE PACK.

Training Puppies to Go in Couples and Answer to Call.

A pack of foxhounds can be kept up only by weeding out as spring comes round the unfit and replenishing their ranks with selections from the now full grown puppies that have come in from walk.

Here is a tremendous task for the master and huntsman, says Bailly's Magazine. To examine each single hound out of some fifty couple or more and assess its probability as a success behind the fox, to weigh carefully in each case the considerations of neck, shoulders, loin and limb is a business of all devouring interest.

Almost daily in the kennels are masters of hounds and huntsmen in their white kennel coats, brooding thoughtfully over their future hopes, and discussing the motley crowd of romping puppies as they fly to the bit of biscuit tossed to some far corner of the yard and show their comportment and display their strong and their weak points.

Now and then a likely couple is isolated for special study, and, falling naturally and with easy grace into their role, they sit up with that dignified and inimitable grace which only a foxhound possesses.

The answering to their names is part of their education, which, although of course this has been in a measure achieved at walk, has now to be emphasized. But to make each of fifty or sixty couples respond at once to his name is a task not acomplished easily, though each hound in the hundred may be perfectly well aware who is wanted when the name is called.

Feeding time is the great occasion for this lesson to be driven home. Outside a door, held just sufficiently ajar to admit one hound at a time, some fifty yong hounds, with a few old stagers left in to illustrate the lesson, are collected, eagerly awaiting their horseflesh and oatmeal. With wistful, upturned faces each waits his turn.

"Prodigal!" calls the huntsman, and from the far end of the gathering, perhaps right on the outskirts, or secreted among the motley crowd, up to the door creeps or vaults over the others, as they rage round, Prodigal. Then to the call of Careless there is a stir through the crowd, and in slips Careless.

So the young hounds watch it all, and thus they quickly learn to do likewise, till they are so perfectly drilled that not a hound will stir until its name has been called.

Then comes another ordeal—to learn to go in couples. This too should, where possible, be taught at walk, and if puppy walkers would save their puppies many a miserable day at kennels they would get them used to the couples very young.

When fulgrown it is a most tiresome business. They resent it keenly, and many a bloody battle is attempted when they find themselves chained to another hound. But it is a lesson which has to be learned for many reasons, and when they are at last at home in the couples it is of the very greatest advantage to themselves as well as their trainers.

TEACHING BY MOVING PICTURES

One of the new uses to which moving pictures are put is teaching, and at least one house dealing in films publishes a list of some hundreds intended for class room use.

Most peculiar of all are the pictures of operations intended for display in hospitals and medical colleges. In fact it is explicitly stated that medical and surgical films are restricted to exhibition before such institutions and cannot be leased except under strict guarantees that their use will be so limited.

Perhaps, however, the general public would not care to sit through a vaudeville show and at the end as the house was darkened read in letters of light upon the screen: "Removal of a myxomatous tumor of the thigh," or "Extirpation of a bilateral exophthalmic goitre."

The catalogue, which describes these films and which promises many more than are contained in the issue for this year, describes them in great detail. On eseries consits of a half dozen operations all of the same general nature, the "Extirpation of encapsuled tumors," and in all more than one-fifth of a mile of film is needed.

Surgery is not alone in being thus illustrated. Medicine has its pictures, bore particularly to illustrate the diseases in which there is a characteristic walk. Various forms of paralysis where the diagnosis is dependent on the gait are shown in detail. The pictures of such a disease as paralysis agitans show the characteristic rigidity of the body when the sufferer is walking and of the face muscles when talking.

An unusual series illustrates the effect of beri-beri on the natives of Borneo.

Moving pictures also have their use in solving problems of agriculture and public health. The dealers in films announce that by a process which they describe as micro-kinematography they can show the typhoid bacilli magnified 850 diameters in all stages of growth and movement. Similarly the circulation of blood in the web of a frog's foot is shown, and the movement of the chlorophyl or green coloring bodies in the leaf.

The possibility of teaching geography in this way is easily understood, and the motion picture camera has invaded most parts of the civilized world. Even the religious field is not neglected and the attention of Sunday schools and missionary societies is called to such subjects as "Open air Bible classes in India," conducted by native evangelists, or Outcasts of India: Procession of men, women and children who have embraced the Christian religion."

Zoology offers a list of subjects that ought to charm any child into forgetting that he is learning. The subjects range from Polar bear fishing to camels crossing the desert. Very many of these pictures have been made in the famous wild animal park of Carl Hagenbeck near Hamburg.

Of the microscopic picture some 600 feet is devoted to the one subject of "Life in a water butt," with a cheerful collection of views of such creatures as megatherium bacilli and paramecium, or a swarm of water fleas.—New York Sun.

VOL. LX NO. 34. TECUMSEH, MICHIGAN, TUESDAY, JULY 19 1910. WHOLE NO 92

The Ham Fair at Paris.

A feature of Parisian life is the ham fair which is held on the Boulevard Richard Le Noir. The name of this fair is wholly misleading, for as far as I have ever seen hams are the very last thing any one ever buys there. Old brass and copper curios, quaint jewelry, rare china, lace, tapestries and books are what most people go out to seek, and a sight not to be easily forgotten is the long, wide boulevard lined with ramshackle stalls laden with every possible kind of lumber and presided over by the most rapacious of brocanteurs. Out of piles of valueless lumber Americans and English diligently seek for their pet kind of curios, and there is not an artist in Paris who cannot point to some bit of furniture in his or her studio and say with pride, "I got that for 5 francs at the ham fair." No one ever pays more than 5 francs, I notice, but, alas, every year these five franc bargains are becoming more rare, and even as housekeeping in Paris grows more and more costly so does the furnishing of one's house to keep.—London Queen.

Only a Question of Possibility.

Among the customers of a tea store opened in the northwest part of the city the other night was a man who, after buying a pound of coffee, handed a counterfeit half dollar to the shopkeeper.

"This money is counterfeit; I'm corry, sir," said the shopkeeper.

"Yes; I know it," replied the customer, grinning. "Got it here one day last week, and I've been saving it for you." Then, noting the smile upon the shopkeeper's face, the customer said, evidently offended, "Perhaps you doubt my word?"

"Oh, not at all, sir; not at all. I couldn't doubt the word of so truthful a man. I was simply smiling because I wondered how it was possible for you to have got the money here. This place was opened only night before last."

Thereupon the customer departed hastily after producing a good coin and slipping the counterfeit into his own pocket.—Philadelphia Times.

Lancashire Humor.

There was a Lancashire collier who went out on Sunday with his wheelbarrow because, as he said, "I've lost mi dog, an' a felly looks sich a foo' goein' a-walkin' bi hisself."

Then there was the workingmen's club committee which wanted to indorse the accounts "audited and found correct and tuppence over" and the customer who, on being told that the price of candles had gone up owing to the war, asked whether they were "feightin' bi candle leet."

Also one recalls the laggard Lancashire lover who, when asked for a kiss, said he was "goein' to do it in a bit," and the old ladies who praised a certain Darwin clergyman as "a grand burier," and of the orator who translated "Dieu et mon droit" into "Evil be to him what evil thinks!"—"Lancashire Life and Character," by Frank Ormerod.

Japan's Giant Wrestlers.

Japanese wrestlers are not to be confused with Japanese exponents of jiu jitsu. The wrestlers belong to the older school, in which weight is a paramount quality. It is a remarkable thing that a race which is on the average four or five inches under the European standard in point of height should have produced a special cult of wrestlers who are giants in stature and strength. The leading wrestlers of Tokyo or Osaka or Hiogo are all men at least six feet in height and weighing perhaps 300 pounds. They are a race apart. Wrestling is an occupation which has been handed down from father to son for many generations. And the explanation of their prowess is that they have always been meat eaters, while the rest of Japan, either from choice or necessity, have been in the main vegetarians.

Diamonds Under Water.

An imitation diamond is never so brilliant as a genuine stone. If your eye is not experienced enough to detect the difference, a very simple test is to place the stone under water. The imitation stone is practically extinguished, while a genuine diamond sparkles even under water and is distinctly visible. When possible, place a genuine stone beside the possible imitation under water, and the contrast will be apparent to the least experienced eyes.

Consistent Theory.

"Don't you believe the husband is the head of the house and should have the final say?"

"Certainly I do."

"Then why don't you come out in the open and say so?"

"Because my wife won't let me."—Exchange.

Well Trained.

Mrs. Boggs—Mr. Meekman is a splendid example of what a man ought to be. Mr. Boggs—Not at all. He's a splendid example of what a wife, two sisters, a grownup daughter and a mother-in-law think a man ought to be.

Yet He Meant Well.

Just as the train was leaving the Fifty-eighth street elevated station a man who had got off there hurried along the platform and spoke to a passenger sitting by an open window in the smoking car.

"Quick!" he cried. "Please hand me that package. I left it on the seat when I got out just now."

"Sure," said the passenger, picking up the bundle and tossing it out of the window.

"Thanks!"

"Hey, there! What are you doing that for?" demanded the wrathful, red faced man sitting next to him.

"Why, he"—

"You double dyed idiot, that package belonged to me! It was $15 worth of laces and ribbons I was taking home to my wife!"

Over the scene that followed let us draw a veil.—Chicago Tribune.

Reckless.

"Aw, come on!" the little boy was heard to remark. "Be a sport. I'll bet yer any amount o' money up to 5 cents."—Harper's.

True Happiness.

About the happiest man in the world should be he that, having a fad, is able to make a living at it.—Chicago Record-Herald.

TAFT LEAVES FOR TEN DAYS CRUISE

President Outlines His Position on State Conventions.

CABLES MIKADO HIS THANKS

Greeting Extended Secretary Dickinson and Party in Tokio "Strengthens Bond of Friendship Between Two Countries."

Beverly, Mass., July 18.—President Taft is not going to draw any platforms for use at Republican state conventions this fall. He has no desire to figure as the dictator of party policies and will not assume the authority of a writer-in-chief of these more or less important documents. Neither does he intend to become the arbiter in factional fights, and he will not attempt to select men from any office as administration candidates. Taft expressed the belief that in most cases delegates to state conventions possessed sufficient interest and intelligence to draw platforms that suited them.

He let it be known that he had not come out with an out and out endorsement of the Ohio platform that Senator Charles Dick and Wade E. Ellis of Ohio brought up here. The senator and Mr. Ellis were of the opinion after seeing the president that their platform would serve as a model for other conventions. The president did not repudiate this assertion to callers, but he did let it be known that he would not bother with other platforms.

Former Gov. John F. Hill, acting chairman of the Republican national committee, and Byron Boyd, chairman of the Maine state committee, motored down to Beverly from Augusta to Burgess Point. The president promised them to make three short visits in Maine on the trip north, which begins today. One is to be at Eastport, Tuesday; the second at Bangor on Saturday, and the third at Rockland on the 27th. To get to Bangor the president will take a special train from Bar Harbor. He will stop at each of these three towns only an hour.

Friends of Mr. Taft reiterated the statement that he is out of the campaign in Ohio. Senator Burton is coming to see him today, but it was plainly indicated that no settlement was to be reached here as to candidates for the governorship.

The personnel of the party which will go north on the Mayflower today was made public tonight. Here is the list. The president, Mrs. Taft, Master Charlie Taft, Horace D. Taft, Mrs Louis T. Moore, a sister of Mrs. Taft, Prof. oMore, Secretary to the President, C. D. Norton, Assistant Secretary of the Navy and Mrs. Winthrop, Miss Mabel Boardman, Capt. A. W. Butt, M. P. Webster and James Sloan Jr.

Announcement was made at the executive offices that President Taft was much pleased with the reception given to Secretary of War Dickinson in Tokio. Here is the telegram the president sent to the Emperor of Japan:

"I wish to express to your majesty my deep appreciation of the generous and courteous hospitality extended to Secretary Dickinson and his party during their visit to Japan. The expression of cordial welcome evoked strengthens the bonds of friendship between the two countries."

Wilmington, Del., July 18.—The most severe electrical storm of the season occurred here and as a result one man is dead, another was fearfully shocked by lightning, and considerable damage was done.

DEATH SOLVES A MYSTERY

C. M. Smith, Killed, Left $40,000 to Family—Gone Five Years.

Mexico City, July 18. — Charles M. Smith, an American mining man, who was accidentally killed near Topic, a few days ago, had more than $40,000 deposited in a local bank to the credit of his wife and children, who reside in San Antonio, Tex.

It has developed since Smith's death that he was formerly a policeman in San Antonio. He mysteriously disappeared from his home in that city five years ago and his family and friends had never obtained any trace of him until they were communicated with by the bank officials after the tragic death. Smith left a will and a written statement of why he disappeared from home, but the latter has not been made public.

He was then warned to change his ways and not to heap any further abuse upon his aged parent.

Then the "white caps" called upon a woman resident and told her that she would be obliged to give her children better care, else she would be given the same dose as Neal.

NORWAY FAVORS MADRIZ BLOCKADE

Norwegian Consuls of U. S. Notified of Bluefields Blockade.

QUESTION INVOLVED IS SERIOUS

Estrada Stronghold May Encounter Trouble in Securing Provisions, as Majority of Vessels Entering Port Are Norwegian.

New Orleans, July 18.—The Nicaraguan, or rather the Bluefields situation, has been rendered more complicated by the order of the government of Norway just communicated to the Norwegian consuls here and throughout the United States recognizing the Madriz blockade of Bluefields and warning all vessels that the government has withdrawn its protection from vessels entering Bluefields, and they will do so at their own risk.

By this degree the Madriz converted man-of-war, the Venus, may seize any Norwegian vessel trying to enter into Bluefields in defiance of the Madriz decre of blockade and Norway will make no objection to it. This action is rendered all the more serious by the fact that all the vessels running from New Orleans and Mobile to Bluefields fly the Norwegian flag. The steamship Impleates, loaded with provisions for that port, is now being detained here until this problem can be solved and telegrams have been sent to the Norwegian minister in Washington trying to arrange matters satisfactorily. The question is an important one, as Bluefields is the Estrada coast of Nicaragua being cut off from the interior by the Madriz armies are entirely dependent on this country for food, and the many Americans there, as well as the revolutionary army, will soon be starving if cut off from New Orleans, its base of supplies. Therefore, owing to the attitude of the United States two American sailors have been taken on board every ship entering Bluefields, thus preventing the Madriz forces at Bluefields Bluff from firing upon the vessel.

BOYS SAVE MANY LIVES

Fight Dangerous Fire on Randall's Island, N. Y.

Buildings Containing Hundreds of Feeble-Minded Persons Saved by Aid of Boy Outcasts.

New York, July 18.—Heroism of a brigade of boy fire-fighters from the house of refuge did much toward saving several buildings on Randall's island, containing hundreds of feeble-minded inmates, and also the babies' hospital, with 300 little patients.

The structures were threatened with fire which started in the island tailor shop.

The boys did efficient work in helping the regular firemen. Panics started among the children and the older patients, and nurses and doctors had all they could do to control them. Hard work confined the fire to the building in which it originated, with only a nominal loss.

St. Charles, Mich., July 18.—In a car which brings to the surface dirt and rock from the interior of No. 2 mine of the Robert Gage Mining company, George Alderton found parts of a skeleton that had evidently belonged to some prehistoric creature.

RAILROAD STRIKE APPEARS CERTAIN

Sheriff Bruff Serves Notice He Will Not Aid Non-Unionists.

BREAK MAY COME ANY MOMENT

Pennsylvania Road Prepares to House and Feed 2,500 Strike Breakers in Event Walkout Occurs —Sheriff's Statement.

Pittsburg, July 18.—There is marked uneasiness here over strike conditions relating to the Pennsylvania railroad and the Pennsylvania lines west of Pittsburg. All day thousands of workmen have been about the tracks and round houses of the road, and it is said that now that the strike at daybreak or not later than noon today may be expected. At a late hour last night the union railroad men were still meeting in their different headquarters and no secret is made of the fact that a strike has been advised by the men inside the meetings.

Sheriff Judd H. Bruff, of Pittsburg, threw a bomb into the camp of the railroad people by announcing that he would not consider it his duty to protect men whom the company brought in to take the place of striking workmen. Sheriff Bruff admitted that he was now ready to swear in 1,500 deputy sheriffs at the first signs of trouble, but added:

"I will be prepared for any emergency which may require the protection of property in event of a strike, but this does not include the protection of the men who will take the places of the striking workmen. I wish this point made very clear and have emphasized it to the railroad people. If there is to be a strike here, I will be on hand to protect property and I will protect it fully, but I will not permit my men to be used as guards for strange men coming to take the place of dissatisfied workmen."

The Pennsylvania road is prepared to house and feed 2,500 strikebreakers in what is known as the Pittsburg district and in the event of trouble they claim there will not be atrain cancelled.

A Fire In The Woods

When It Was Over There Was a Change of Heart

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

The Sunday dinner was over, and Rebecca was washing dishes in the big kitchen. Henry Miles and his wife came out dressed in their best clothes and got into the waiting buggy. Ever since they had been married twenty-five years before the Sunday afternoon ride had been a regular proceeding.

Their daughter Beth waved them a farewell as they drove out of the big gate.

Beth looked anxiously away toward the woods that bordered the distant wheatfields. Behind them rose a pale gray cloud now and then flecked by flying cinders. Rain had not fallen for several weeks, and the woods were like tender, and the paths were thickly carpeted with dry leaves fallen from last year.

The kitchen windows faced the wheatfields, and Rebecca's red face was pressed anxiously to the pane. Then she saw Beth and came to the door.

"The woods are afire, Miss Beth," she said excitedly. "Your pa's wheat will be done for if the wind don't change pretty soon."

The wheatfield was an undulating sea of pale green blades six inches high. The dry weather had slightly parched the tips, and Beth bent down to assure herself that the grain was too green to be affected by the fire even if it should reach the fields. When she looked up again several men were running across the field. One of them saw her, paused and turned back.

Slowly she walked through the wheat, her light tread scarcely crushing the young shoots. Her fair cheeks took on the rose tint of early dawn, and her blue eyes were veiled under a thick fringe of lashes. The man watched her coming toward him, his handsome eyes drinking in her fresh, spring-like beauty. Her pink gown fell softly about her slender form as the green wheat rippled about her feet.

At last Beth lifted her shy eyes and saw his good looking face with its reckless, smiling lips—saw the immaculate whiteness of his collar and cuffs and the trim neatness of his handsome clothes. He carried his coat on his arm and slipped into it as she came up with him. They had smiled a greeting into each other's eyes, and their first words were commonplace enough.

"The woods are afire," said Ralph Clinton. "Don't you want to go along and see the fun, Beth?"

A look of disappointment crept into the girl's face. "Aren't you going to fight it, Ralph?" she asked.

The young man laughed good naturedly. "It isn't necessary. There are half a hundred trying to kill it with sand or back fire, but it's got too big a headway. Besides, the wind is strong from the southwest, and nothing can stop it until it dies out for want of something to burn."

"Where is it now, Ralph?" questioned Beth quietly.

"Out in Deep Hollow woods—a spark from the railroad started the blaze and away she went! There were five miles burned over at Wayneville yesterday."

"Deep Hollow woods belong to my father. He owns right through to the farm here. It means a serious loss to him," said Beth.

"It's too bad, Beth, but nothing can save it, so there's no use in worrying," returned Ralph carelessly. "Come; let us go and see the fun. The woods are great at this time, you know. Perhaps you may find a moccasin flower."

"Wait a moment," said Beth, and she turned and with flying feet recrossed the field to the barn. When she returned she carried a shovel in one hand.

"There!" she panted, thrusting the utensil into his unwilling grasp. "Take that along, Ralph. I'm ashamed to have you appear there unprepared to fight the fire."

"Not in these clothes—not on your life!" ejaculated Mr. Clinton inelegantly. "I'll carry the shovel for the looks of the thing, but if I fight a forest fire it will be by proxy! Some of the negroes from the hollow will be smoked out and glad of a job to take my place for a consideration, eh?"

"Those poor negroes!" cried Beth, disregarding his selfish speech. "I forgot all about them. Their little homes will be ruined. Let us hurry, Ralph. In spite of your joking I am sure you are going to help in a time of need like this."

Without further parley Ralph helped Beth over the fence and into a woodland path, through which they hurried at a greater speed than the young man fancied. Given this time and opportunity, he felt that the April woods were an ideal spot in which to ask Beth the momentous question that had been hovering on his lips for weeks. He was quite sure of her answer, for she had shown her preference for him during the past winter, and his cleverness and wit had quite thrown Ben Wyatt into the shade—raw, country bumpkin that Ben was!

Ralph's lips curled in a little smile of contempt as he thought of the rival who had quietly withdrawn from the contest for Beth Miles' favor when the rivalry became the subject of open comment.

The smoke grew thicker, and the air was filled with flying cinders that fell in crisp flakes on their heads. In the distance they could hear hoarse shouts of men, the crackling of burning trees and underbrush and the barking of dogs.

Where the three roads crossed was to be the battleground. If the fire crossed Deep Hollow road the little gathering of negro cabins was doomed. The fire was coming toward them now, and they could see the forms of men through the smoke. Strange, fantastic forms they were, frantically beating back the encroaching flames or shoveling loosened soil on the creeping fire that ate along the ground.

The group of cabins was untouched, but in grave danger. The unfortunate occupants were removing their poor bits of furniture, and two ramshackle carts were being filled with the goods. Old Uncle Peter Green occupied a chair of state in one cart. A tottering chair it seemed owing to the uneasy antics of the frightened mule in the shafts. Weeping and praying and lamenting, they passed ponderously down the road along which Beth had just come.

"Go down to the farm, Judy," she said to the dominant spirit of the group. "Rebecca will take care of you till the danger is over."

Out of the thick of smoke a man turned and recognized her; saw her standing there in her pink cotton dress dazed by the smoke. Beside her was Ralph Clinton leaning on an idle shovel, whistling softly as he watched the battle with the approaching flames.

Ben Wyatt leaped into the road and confronted them. Clad in blue flannel shirt and corduroy trousers, hatless, his sun browned face and arms black with soot and grime, he presented a sorry contrast to Ralph Clinton. But somehow Beth's glance caught his steady gaze and lingered there for a brief instant, and she saw nothing to despise in Ben Wyatt, homely farmer that he outwardly was.

"Get back there, Clinton!" commanded Ben angrily. "Take Beth away from here. Can't you see it's no place for a woman?"

"Mind your own business, Wyatt!" retorted Ralph. "Get to work there on your fool's job!"

There was no time for further argument. The men, who had strung out in a wide semicircle, were drawing closer together. They had started a back fire; and there was danger when the two fires met that the sudden leap of flames might ignite the vegetation on the bluff. If it did the woods were doomed. But the farmers fought valiantly, and little by little the flames were beaten back from the crossroads until they smoldered down and left charred and blackened desolation wherever their blasting fingers had touched.

Tired and exhausted, the fire fighters lay panting in the sand of the roads.

It was Beth who sent a lurking pickaninny to call the fugitives home to the cabins, and it was she who found a pail and dipper in Judy Brown's kitchen and went to the bubbling spring for water to refresh the tired men. Before it came Ben Wyatt's turn to drink from the dipper she slipped away down the road toward home. As she passed him Ralph Clinton arose and followed her.

"See here, Beth," he said disagreeably, "I'd like to know what I've done to deserve such treatment at your hands."

Beth turned and surveyed him with level eyes. "It isn't anything you've done, Ralph," she said quietly. "On the contrary, it's what you haven't done. I don't think you can understand how I feel about it, Ralph. I thought I cared for you, but I am afraid it was your appearance I loved after all. Please forget all about me if you can," Beth said contritely.

"Well, I seem to have got all that's coming to me today," he said jauntily. "Goodby!"

"Goodby," said Beth gently. As she watched him walk slowly away she felt a pang at the shattering of a cherished illusion, while at the same time there was a strange, sweet joy in her heart, mingled with a fear that she had dallied with real love and lost it.

Ralph Clinton turned to fling a backward taunt, "I suppose you think you can whistle Ben Wyatt back, but you're too late, Beth!" Then he went on and disappeared.

The girl's face whitened at the taunt and its insinuation, and with a little strangled sob she leaned against the friendly trunk of a tree and hid her eyes.

Ben Wyatt's voice behind her startled her to betray telltale tears on the thick lashes. Grimy and scorched, hatless and tattered and scratched, he was a sorry looking lover. The look in his faithful eyes made up for everything that seemed lacking.

"I heard what that pup said just now, Beth," said Ben grimly, standing with folded arms before her. "I ought to have stepped in long ago and told you what I want to say right now, but somehow I thought you liked him best. This forest fire isn't a patch to the fire I've been through this winter! You don't have to whistle Ben Wyatt back—he's here. Beth, darling, shall he stay?"

Beth came to his arms with a happy cry, and they must have forgotten the passage of time, for the returning cavalcade of the fugitives startled them into embarrassed realization that their secret was no longer their own, but was shared by the grinning denizens of Deep Hollow wood.

"Land av love!" shouted Aunt Judy exuberantly, and to the two, blushing under the oak tree as the procession passed, it was verily a "land of love."

In Westminster Abbey.

Fox's tomb is perhaps the most ridiculous in the abbey, but others run it hard—the naked figure of General Wolfe supported by one of his staff in full regimentals and receiving a crown from Victory; William Wilberforce apparently listening to Sheridan telling a comic tale and contorting his features in the endeavor not to laugh; the Sir Cloudesley Shovel, in periwig and Roman toga, which excited the mirth even of contemporaries, and all the monuments erected by the East India company, with palm trees and other tropical exuberances, to the memory of great soldiers, like Sir Eyre Coote. From the point of view of good taste a dictator would be justified in dismissing these and many more to the stonemason's yard.—Cornhill Magazine.

How Pausanius Died.

Pausanius, the Greek general, died by self administered poison. When hotly pursued by those sent to apprehend him on a charge of treason and sacrilege he took refuge in the sanctuary of a temple. Unable to remove him by force and also unwilling to violate the sanctuary, the officers walled up the entrance and began to unroof the building. When he could be seen they noticed that he was chewing something which proved to be a quill filled with poison. By the time the work had sufficiently advanced to admit of their entrance he was in a dying condition.

Secret For Secret.

In the days of Louis XIV. even warriors bandied epigrams with one another.

The Marechal de Grammont had taken a fortress by siege.

"I will tell you a secret," said its military governor after surrendering. "The reason of my capitulation was that I had no more powder."

"And, secret for secret," returned the marechal suavely, "the reason of my accepting it on such easy terms was that I had no more balls."

THE BAMBOO FOR CRIMINALS

Shanghai Police Official Says Its the Only Means to Subdue Them.

Out in Shanghai the authorities have tried to control certain desperate Chinese criminals by punishing them humanely, and have found that it won't do, that it is impossible to keep the offenders in subjection without inflicting corporal punishment with the bamboo. This is told in a report made to the municipal council by Col. C. D. Bruce, the Captain-Superintendent of the Watch.

The council has indorsed his view and a lot of Shanghai people are very much wrought up about it, saying that it is a blot on Shanghai's fair scutcheon, this admission that the resources of civilization have been exhausted in the treatment of wrong-minded natives.

Recently there have been a number of cases of acid throwing in the streets. They were not followed by any attempted robbery or other crime, but appeared to be, as Col. Bruce reported, "either isolated instances of wilful hooliganism or mere practice in the art of acid throwing."

"The watch committee," Col. Bruce says, "is aware that I have more than once referred to the difficulty if not the impossibility of keeping the criminal classes here in subjection without the infliction of corporal punishment.

"To show that my argument has reason it is only necessary to remind the watch committee that the Chinese authorities whose jurisdiction surrounds the settlement make daily use of the bamboo, and this although the same authorities have forbid its use by the Magistrate at the Mixed Court.

"The watch committee will perhaps recall a case during the last few days in which too harmless coolies were chastened with 1,000 blows apiece for nothing more than obeying the orders given them by their foreign superiors.

"It is a mere waste of words to dwell upon the inconsistency which permits the Chinese authorities to inflict immediately outside settlement limits such a cruel sentence upon two harmless coolies while declining to allow the Mixed Court Magistrate inside the settlement to sentence two worthless ruffians who live by crime to the punishment of a hundred blows.

"The only means of preventing the inception of crimes like acid throwing is, in my opinion, corporal punishment; the cangue freely used is the next best punishment, though far behind."

The cangue is a big wooden collar sometimes set in a cumbrous frame on wheels, which the prisoner has to tote around while other persons, if they choose to do so, pelt him with anything they have handy; in other words, the cangue is a sort of portable stocks, and the prospect of the revival of its use is very distressing to many good Englishmen there.

WOOD PRODUCTION IN GERMANY

It is a Continuing Industry, Owing to Scientific Forestry.

Among all the nations of the world Germany receives the credit of being the most thoroughly scientific. She does with her limited natural resources what younger nations will soon be compelled to do in self-protection; she conserves them. When our wood supplies, stored up from 100 to 500 years, are within sight of their end, the saw-mills that have been moved from the white pine belt of the North to the yellow pine belt of the South have been moved to the Pacific coast for their last stand, then Germany's scientific forestry policy will receive better recognition.

We do not think of moving a grist mill about from one wheat field to another, as the fields in turn become exhausted. After one crop is harvested another is coming on. So it must be with the saw-mill and the crop of trees. If it takes 50 years to raise a tree of a given species, then one-fiftieth of the forest may be cut each year, provided it reseeds or is replanted—and the saw-mill stays at the same place and the workman live in their permanent snug homes near by; the "lumber shanty" will be a thing of the past; raising trees a business like raising wheat.

A Fair Exchange.

The Hon. Joseph H. Coate tells of a meeting at a London club of a Bishop and Lord Rosebery. During the course of their conversation the reverend gentleman observed to his Lordship:

"I've an invitation to dine this evening. What a nuisance it is—a long dinner, I mean. There are two things I absolutely dread—a long dinner and a long sermon. I contend that, however good they may be, neither the dinner nor the sermon should take more than twenty minutes at the most."

Rosebery smiled. "It seems to me," he said, "that the matter might be nicely arranged by knocking ten minutes off the sermon and putting it on the dinner."—Harper's Weekly.

BLUE RIBBON RACES

Held in Detroit August 1-5.

Recent miles on the part of trotters and pacers being prepared for their engagements in the grand circuit indicate that extreme speed will prevail in all of the races during Detroit's famous blue ribbon meeting, August 1 to 5. The Chamber of Commerce and Merchants' & the Manufactures' stakes will have to be sensational to a degree to furnish better sport this year than the purse events.

One of the races for developed trotters promises to make turf history. This is the 2:07 trot on August 2, in which The Harvester and Bob Douglas meet Spanish Queen. Two years ago this splendid mare won the M. & M. and clever as she then was, she is better and faster to day. Recently she trotted a mile in 2:05 on the Detroit track, one of the quarters at the rate of 1:56, so that she is fit and ready to fight it out with either of the aspirants for the stallion crown.

The three-year-olds that start in the $15,000 futurities on August 1 are reported to be in excellent shape and a wonderful race is expected, because of the inducement. This is the first futurity given by the Detroit Driving Club, and serves to round off the blue ribbon meeting and make it complete in every detail.

The free-for-all pace on Thursday, August 4, will introduce that wonderful gray horse, The Eel, and, fast as he is he will have to be at his very best to beat such race horses as Alleen Wilson, Darkey Hal, George Gano and Ross K.

Such events, with the unusual fields that will score in the M. & M. and Chamber of Commerce, cannot fail to keep the blue ribbon to the forefront of all meetings. Michigan people are lucky when they can see such racing within the confines of their state, and in a city where a week is as delightful as it always is in Detroit.

BRIEF AND BREEZY

It appears that they neglected to bray for Jefferlei. The white preachers might have won by a preponderance of supplication.

It may be a mere coincidence, of course, but Emperor William has not been a well man since that meeting.

COSTLY EDITION

Volume Valued at $1,850 Presented to Philadelphia Free Library.

Reginald Heber Bishop's superb work on "Investigations and Studies in Jade," on which the author spent twenty years of labor. It cost $185,000 to publish the edition of only 100 copies. Two are used for copyright and the remaining ninety-eight will be placed in the libraries of Europe and America and presented to royalty. The Philadelphia Library owns copy No. 91. After printing the type was distributed and all materials used in the preparation of the work were destroyed. The library's copy was presented on the express condition that it shall remain the property of the library in perpetuity. The first volume deals with the subject of jade in great detail, covering 250 pages. It treats of jade in China, giving its sources, value and colors; then jade as a mineral, with very elaborate descriptions and specimens, accompanied by analyses, reductions and notes, followed by detailed statements of methods of working jade, especially in China and New Zealand, concluding with descriptions of the prehistoric-worked jade and the historic-worked jade in China, India, Anam, Europe and New Zealand. Volume 2 consists of a descriptive catalogue of the articles now housed at the Metropolitan Museum. The collection has been arranged under three main headings—mineralogical, archaeological and art objects. The volumes are bound in crushed levant, with handsome doubles of garnet watered silk, the backs being decorated with plain but very artistic gold tooling.—Philadelphia Record.

A Breeze in Oklahoma.

"Wind that blows so fast you cannot see through it possibly is a new thing to science," said a Kansas man who recently moved to Oklahoma, "but that is what I saw last year. I had seen that a storm was coming, and was hastening from the barn to the house, when I became aware that the disturbance was a cyclone. The house was still standing in plain view of myself and my wife, both of whom were running for the cellar, which was under it, when suddenly we came upon the basement of the house. The house was blown away right before our faces and eyes and yet we had not seen it go. The wind had got to blowing so fast that we could not see through it and so the house had sailed away without our being aware of it. Our three children were safe and sound in the basement, so we didn't feel the disappointment so keenly of losing the house. But I swear, and I'll not recede from it, that the wind blew so fast the eye couldn't penetrate clear air. I wish some scientist would explain it.—Kansas City Times.

TWO "HIKERS" DO 315 MILES IN LESS THAN SIX DAYS

Albert Shearar and Charles T. Marshall Have Charming Trip From Detroit to Indianapolis

Tired, but happy, two hikers arrived in Indianapolis Sunday morning at 10 o'clock, having walked from Detroit to this city, more than 300 miles, in a little less than six days. They were Albert Shearar, a student of Rose Polytechnic school, and Charles T. Marshall, both of this city.

Going by train to Detroit, they spent a day in that city, took in Belle Isle and spent part of a day in Windsor, Canada. They left Detroit at noon on the Fourth of July and reached Ann Arbor that evening. The next morning they visited Michigan university, Ferry field and the Sigma Nu frathouse of which frat Mr. Shearer is a member. Leaving Ann Arbor they headed for Adrian, then to Alvordton and Montpelier, O., and ot Butler, New Haven, Ft. Wayne, Warren, Marion, Alexandria, Anderson and Indianapolis. Part of the trip was walked on the roads and part on the railroad ties.

The weather during the hike was good, and out of the 315 miles traveled the young men rode only four miles. This was near Arctic, this state, when during a rainstorm they slipped into an open freight car and rode to Butler. The two young men were dressed in their oldest clothes, wore heavy shoes and sweater vests, the latter being the only covering they had at night when they slept in the open air.

The hilly climbing in Michigan proved tiresome, and the sandy roads were six inches deep with dust in some places. Saturday the young men made their best day's walking record walking from 10 miles this side of Warren to 11 miles this side of Anderson, a distance of 56 miles. They had arisen at 4 o'clock in the morning and walked until 8 at night, only stopping long enough to get something to eat. Sunday morning they "hiked" about 20 miles and reached here two hours ahead of their six days' schedule, doing on an average of 53 miles a day.

We clipped the above from the Indianapolis News. The young men stopped in Tecumseh on their way to Adrian the morning of July 5 and when here called at the Herald office.

THE THREE SPECIES OF MOOSE

Expressed in External Features as Illustrated in the Adult Male.

There are supposed to be three species of Moose: The European moose or elk, found in northern Europe and adjoining parts of Asia; the common moose of eastern America, distinguished chiefly from its European congener by the skull being narrowed across the maxillaries, also by its greater size and darker color, and the Alaskan moose, separated by its giant stature, its narrow occupit, broad palate and heavy mandibles.

Expressed in external features as illustrated in the adult male (always best for differentiating species):

The Scandinavian elk is a small gray animal with little palm and many spikes on its antlers.

The Canadian is a large black animal with much palmation and always a separate brow bunch of spikes. I have seen hundreds of Canadian moose antlers, but never a pair that did not show a well-developed separate group of prongs in front of each brow. I have seen a score or more of Swedish, but never saw one that did have a separated brow group of prongs, though I confess I have seen figures of such.

The Alaskan is a richly colored, black, gray and brown giant, not only the largest deer alive today, but believed to be the largest that ever did exist, since no fossil has been found to equal it in bulk. Its antlers differ chiefly in size from those of the Canadian moose, but Mr. Madison Grant claims that they are also more complex and have in the brow antlers a second palmation which is set at right angles to that of the main palmation. In these peculiarities, he finds, "a startling resemblance is shown to the extinct Cervalces, a moose-like deer of Pleistocene times, probably ancestral to the genus Alces.

"If this resemblance indicates any close relationship, we have in the Alaskan moose a survivor of the archaic type from which the true moose and Scandinavian elk have somewhat degenerated."—Ernest Thompson Seton in Scribner's.

ANNUAL MEETING OF FIRE DEPARTMENT

At the annual meeting of the fire department held Tuesday evening, July 12, at the council building. The following officers were elected:

Pres.—G. B. Garlinghouse.
Vice pres.—Don F. Wright.
Sec.—B. W. Mominee.
Treas.—Fred Rosacrans.
Chief—F. G. Heesen.
1st asst.—W. H. Westcott.
2nd asst.—B. W. Mominee.
Hose foreman No. 1—J. G. Hanford.
" " " "—Fred Cook.

Motion made and carried that the chief and his assistants attend the next council meeting and call their attention to a few facts that seem to have been forgotten—a 6-inch gong on the council building to be operated by the telephone office to sound the alarm; also to the state of the alleys behind the Herald office and the Witherell block, praying that they may be opened so that the hose wagon may drive through instead of backing out as now. This privilege has been granted by the Herald office but the town as yet has made no move in this direction.

It would seem that some things like these should be granted as the fire laddies are public benefactors and are expected to drop everything at the sound of the bell and rush to the rescue, and all this without money or price.

GOOD SHOWING

State Treasurer Has More Cash on Hand Than Last Year

State Treasurer Sleeper's annual report to the citizens of Michigan on the finances of the state shows that the commonwealth closed this fiscal year with a balance in cash of $2,487,878.72, as compared with $1,613,967.54 last year. The total receipts of the year were $13,412,149.78 and the disbursements $12,538,133.60, both of which sums are larger than those of 1909. Most of the state boards and departments which collect fees, turned in more money to the state treasurer this year than they did the previous one. The big business in motor vehicle licenses is shown by the report that the secretary of state collected $58,379.65 in these fees this year, as compared with $8,200 last year.

and save a third on every furrow. This plow has a high foot-lift, which lifts back nearly five inches and is very desirable in stony fields. Any boy who can drive a team can use it.

It has one bail, or hanger, which is an advantage over plows that have two bails as it will work more freely and will not bind. Result-pulls easy.

There is absolutly no side-draft, which is over-come by the steering-rod. We furnish them with steel or chilled shares, jointer or coalter, either 14 inch or 16 inch bottom.

We recommend the steel shares, coalter and 16 inch size, as you can do as much work in the fall and adjust it to the plow 16 inch in the spring.

The best advertisment we have is the satisfied customer who tell their friends. Come in and look it over, or better still, try one.

Chautauqua

THE OPENING MEETING A GREAT SUCCESS

Everyone Delighted.

The initial meeting or the Chautauqua was held in the Opera House Saturday afternoon. A fine audience greeted them and showed their appreciation by the close attention they paid.

It was a representative meeting of the best element of Tecumseh and promised fair for the future of the Chautauqua.

There was something of interest to all. The musical number were of the very best and the elecutionist was fine. As for Dr. Blodgett, he held his audience to the very last moment. Everyone had a treat in one way or another.

The programs for Saturday and Sunday were highly appreciated by all and the attendance was fine.

We would say to all that it will be time well spent to attend these meetings through the week as the good received will be of lasting benefit.

BASE BALL

The Tecumseh Independents administered a 5 to 0 shut out to the Jackson Independents Saturday afternoon. The visiting team is said to be one of the fastest independent teams in Jackson but they were helpless before the effective pitching of Lenardson, who fanned 16 men, and allowed but three scattered hits. Seaman the Jackson box artist was a good left hand twirler but was wild, being to liberal with first bag gifts. Six clean hits were all he allowed. Hienz replaced him in the seventh and finished the game. The attendance was small and discouraging. It is hoped the lovers of base ball will turn out better to future games and thus make it possible to have base ball in Tecumseh the rest of the season, for we have an excellent team here and can promise you your money's worth every time. Batteries Jackson—Seaman, Hienz and Creech; Tecumseh—Lenardson and Heesen.

In the Southern Mich. League there is a race on between the sluggers for the honor of being the first to reach the 100-hit goal. Saier standing 84 Fullerton 79 and Stewart occupying third place.

The three best run getters so far are Ball of Adrian Mitchell of Flint and Saier of Lansing. Score being 50—49—48 runs respective. There is a dispute as to the swiftest man of the three.

Lagoe and Railing who formerly were on the Tecumseh team are reported the leagues best hitting pitchers. Glad to hear of their success.

We notice that manager Vandergift of the Adrian team has resumed his duties again after a five day lay off thinking better of the situation.

ANTHONY FENCE CO. NOW OPEN FOR BUSINESS,

Monday morning, July 18, the Anthony Fence Co. opened up for business under the new management.

They employ the same force of men who were there before. Mr. E. Roy Meade will remain in charge for the next two months or until he leaves for Chicago. Will Albert remains superintendent; Bert Mize, chief clerk; M. D. Strang, shipping clerk, and Miss Mary Meyers, stenographer.

In the Herald's last write-up E. Roy Meade informed us that they were to purchase two acres of land, the deal has been completed for the purchase of three acres instead.

It certainly looks as if Tecumseh was in line for a manufacturing plant that will be of great benefit to the town.

LILLEY STATE BANK

Improvements Begun

The improvements long contemplated by the Lilley State Bank were begun last week when they installed an immense vault. The vault is situated in the east room in the rear of the banking office. It is a double vault and measures 7 1-2 feet wide, 12 feet long and 7 1-2 feet high. There are two comgartments—one on the ground floor and one in the basement. The lower one will be for storage purposes and the other for the cash safe and safety deposits.

The massive door weighs 6500 pounds with a Sargeaht & Greenleaf triple time lock. A Victor safe with screw door weighing 3500 pounds will be placed inside for the cash. There will be day gates to the vault and other devices for safety.

A furnace will be another great improvement. The furnitnre and other fixtures have not been decided upon yet but will be purchased in the near future. The addition of a toilet room is also contemplated.

When finished the Lilley State Bank will be another ornament to our business street. Let the good work go on.

Aviation records and necks are being broken almost daily at Rheims.

You can help to make life one glad sweet song by letting the other fellow have his way once in a while.

IMPROVEMENTS

The Baptist church have in contemplation a thorough renovation of their church—new wall decorations, new paint, electric light fixtures and other improvements too numerous to mention. The outside is growing in beauty every day as the vines spread their tendrils over its surface.

The next place to beautify and improve is McCann Bros. clothing store. They are painting their ceilings and shelving, putting in a new floor and will use clothing cabinets for their goods. When these improvements are completed the store will present a pleasing appearance. Who will be the next to improve the appearance of our business street?

WOMAN'S CLAIM ON GLACIER

She Expects to Dig Some Precious Ore from Her Moving Mining Property.

Mrs. Mary E. Hart, formerly of Los Angeles, who has just returned to Seattle after visiting Alaska, has the distinction of being the first person to stake out a mining claim on a glacier while it was still in action.

Sidney Moise, with the local architect firm of Hunt & Gray, was on board the Seattle, which has just returned from a trip to the Klondike, and he states that for the first time in nine years passengers were able to make a landing at Muir Glacier, near Skagway.

The glacier is considered far from safe, but Mrs. Hart, with natural love of adventure, stepped triumphantly ashore and was followed by others eager for the experience of landing upon the forbidden ice field.

It was found that the moraine, a deposit freighted with precious ore, which is always carried with the ice in this section, had already become quite solid, and Mrs. Hart forthwith staked out a claim.

Mrs. Hart has passed a number of years in Alaska and is conversant with the mining situation there having owned and superintended the work in several claims. In order to gain experience she at one time worked with a pick in her own mine.—Los Angeles Examiner.

Question of Age.

H. A. Buck, who looks after the interests of the Pennsylvania Railroad in San Francisco, was calling on Prof. Jenks, of Cornell, at the St. Francis Hotel the other day. They were exchanging raillery and airy persiflage, and beclouding the ambient atmosphere with much smoke, when a brass-buttoned bellboy cut short their banter by handing the Cornell professor a card.

"Pardon me a moment, Harry," said Prof. Jenks, as he proceeded to read an inscription on the card. It read:

"Some years ago on the occasion of a visit to Alaska, I enjoyed the pleasure of meeting your father, and I would be deeply sensible of the privilege and honor of shaking hands with his son."

"How old was the man who sent up this card?" asked Prof. Jones of the bellboy.

"About 20, sir," said the bellboy.

A thought clouded the brow of the professor for a moment. Then he wrote something on the back of the card and handed it back to the bellboy. The something on the back of the card read:

"My father died thirty-seven years ago. If you have any other good reason for wishing to see me I should be pleased to have you come up."—San Francisco Chronicle.

Free Sample For Baby's Ills

Something can and must be done for the puny, crying baby, for the child that refuses to eat and is restless in its sleep. And since the basis of all health is the proper working of the digestive organs, look first to the condition of the stomach and bowels.

A child should have two full and free movements of the bowels a day. This emptying of the bowels is very important, as with it comes a clear head, a lightness of step, good appetite and sound sleep. But it is equally important to know what to give the child in the emergency of constipation and indigestion. Cathartics are too strong and salts and other purgatives are not only too strong, but the child refuses them because of their bad taste. Have you ever tried Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin? It is a liquid tonic that families have been using for a quarter of a century. It is mild, pleasant-tasting and promptly effective. It is good for you as well as the child, but there is nothing better to take it.

First of all, if you have not yet used it, Dr. Caldwell would like to send you a sample bottle free of charge. In this way you can try it before buying. Later, when convinced of its merits, you can get it of your druggist at fifty cents and one dollar a bottle, just as thousands of other families are doing. The family of Mr. D. W. Spangler of Strattonville, Pa., as well as that of Mr. A. F. Johnson of Walnut Grove, Tenn., started with it in that way and now write that it is their one family necessity next to food itself. If you are unfortunate enough to have a sickly child, one given to constipation and indigestion, you should send for a free sample of this remedy.

Dr. Caldwell personally will be pleased to give you any medical advice you may desire for yourself or family pertaining to the stomach, liver or bowels absolutely free of charge. Explain your case in a letter and he will reply to you in detail. For the free sample simply send your name and address on a postal card or otherwise. For either request the doctor's address is Dr. W. B. Caldwell, R.500 Caldwell building, Monticello, Ill.

HUNTING WILD HORSES.

A Favorite Sport in New South Wales—How the Animals are Broken.

Whether "brumby" is a survival of the aboriginal name for wild horse or a corruption of "unbranded" appears to be a question which philologists have left undecided, but brumby hunting is still a favorite sport in New South Wales.

Districts like the Clarence and Stephens and Manning River watershed are still the home of numerous droves of brumbies, and hunting them is declared to be a very exhilerating pastime. The first step taken is to stake out a corral and make secure all except a narrow entrance, which can subsequently be gated. On either side of the entrance and projecting from it funnelwise a "booby fence" is prepared.

To the simple minded brumby it presumably looks like a stockade, and pieces of fluttering cotton make it look impregnable. When this is ready the young bloods, well mounted, gallop out and round up the wild horses, driving them with shouts and much loud snapping of stock whips toward the mouth of the funnel.

In a group of brumbies there is always a leader, and when once the hunters have got the leader heading for the corral they are pretty certain of the rest of the drove. The fluttering cotton rags of the sham fence are sufficient to deter the brumbies from breaking through the flimsy barriers, and in less time than it takes to tell the wild horses are safely corralled and the big gate shut on them.

Then they are left for four and twenty hours without food and water to reflect on the situation, and after that they can be broke without much difficulty.—London Standard.

Some Tecumseh People Fully Realize It Now

When the back aches from kidney ills.
When urinary troubles annoy you.
There's a certain way to find relief;
A sure way to be cured.
Doan's Kidney Pills will do it.
Tecumseh people endorse this claim.

Mrs. Jeanett Teachout, N. Oneida street, Tecumseh, Mich., says: "I again take pleasure in recommending Doan's Kidney Pills to persons afflicted with kidney trouble. Last fall my kidneys became disordered and I suffered from pains in the small of my back. If I stooped sharp twinges seized me and for a few seconds I was unable to straighten. Too frequent passages of kidney secretions also annoyed me greatly and the doc- [illegible] Kidney Pills were so highly spoken of that I procured a box and began their use. I was so promptly relieved that I continued taking the remedy until my trouble had disappeared."

German Infantry.

The infantry of the German Seventh Army Corps now carries on active service a peculiar little apparatus attached to the sword belt behind their side arms. This apparatus consists of three thin pieces of smooth wood rather more than a foot long and strapped together. These strips of wood form a little tripod, upon which the soldier can rest his rifle and thereby take much better aim. The military authorities welcome this little tripod most warmly, and say that its use will result in far better firing all round by the German infantry. In any case, it is a question of returning to the first principles.—London Globe.

Charles Field, who is believed to be the oldest judge in the United States now presiding, has just celebrated his 93d birthday by holding a session of the District Court at his home in Athol, Mass.

FAMILY QUARRELING

Husband and Wife Not to Loose Their Tempers at the Same Time.

The Jarr family is closely related to nine-tenths of humanity. And the gentle art of family quarreling is one that deserves the attention of all. Shorn of its "cuss" words and bitter recriminations the family quarrel can yet be made, to serve a useful purpose.

I know a man fond of having his own way. He insists his temperament demands freedom. His idea of freedom is to stay out until he gets good and ready to come home, say, about 2 or 3 a. m.

His wife does not love liberty—his brand of liberty—and the Jarr family live in their house without paying rent.

When the advocate of personal freedom comes rambling home with early milk wagon, wife is naturally exasperated. To all her inquiries and reproaches his only answer is "Good morning, Carrie!" the sweetest, most urbane tone.

Now, if that isn't the soft answer that turneth away wrath, what is? Another branch of the ubiquitous Jarrs has drawn up an agreement binding husband and wife not to lose their tempers at the same time.

If she begins the quarrel it is hers and he has no right to appropriate it to his own uses. On the other hand, if he starts the shindig her role is the meek and lowly.

It works beautifully, or at least people who have visited in the house and studied the family jar on its own particular shelf, say so.

The clever woman will never quarrel with her husband just before going out to dinner or to any other social festivity.

It gives other women a bad impression of your ability as a "manager" to see you dragging in a sulky husband, who talks pessimistic drivel all evening and stuffs you into your wraps like so much baled hay when it is time to go home.

We have all extended our fervent sympathy to the man whose wife is wedded to the monolog habit, but even that is better than the spectacle of two unevenly matched people trying to out talk each other.

Patience, charity, forbearance and a number of other virtues, may be developed through the proper use of the family quarrel.

But be sure the man of the house gets his share of these good qualities. Women have selfishly combined to keep these traits in the female line for many generations.

When he begins to criticise the commissary department, don't waste your time framing up excuses. Just say, "Yessir," in your most crushed-to-the-earth voice, and let it go at that.

A woman's favorite answer when her husband finds fault with her management of the children is, Well, they're as much yours as mine. I don't see why you don't correct them yourself?"

How much easier and pleasant for all concerned to sweetly murmur, "Wouldn't it be lively if you could be home all day!" and leave the rest to his imagination.—Jessie M. Partlon.

Water Drinking.

Free water drinking is an essential to vitality and to the development of staying power. All the operations of the body, digestion, assimilation, absorption, elimination of poisonous waste and so on, are carried on by means of water; and an insufficient amount of water in the system means embarrassment of every function. The body of a man of average weight contains more than half a barrel of water, and such a body needs for its proper operation at least two quarts daily of pure water. In this connection, it may not be irrelevant to mention that the Japanese soldiers, whose surprising powers are now engaging the admiration of the world, consume each between two and four gallons of water daily.—W. R. C. Latson, M. D., in the Outing Magazine.

In mining accidents one death in four is caused by afterdamp.

MARRIAGES IN AMERICA.

"Why American Marriages Fail" is discussed by Anna A. Rogers in the Atlantic. As contributory causes she cites the 2,321 courts in this country which are empowered to grant divorces, as against one in England, twenty eight in Germany and seventy-nine in France.

Other reasons are found in the "growing individualism" of woman and her failure to realise that "marriage is her work in the world." From the "excessive education and excessive physical coddling of young women," their devotion to physical culture and sports, a hybrid feminine has been evolved, according to Mrs. Rogers, who is "a cross between a magnified, rather unmannerly boy" and a spoiled, exacting creature who sincerely loves herself alone. A new relationship between the sexes has thus arisen, "a slipshod, unchivalrous companionship," which after marriage is discovered to be "a cause for tears or temper." The girl of the period, in Mrs Rogers's phrase, "must [illegible] Dr. [illegible] as a laughable anachronism, sentiment "sickening nonsense" and courtesy bad form. She idles too much in the shops and at the hairdresser's. Hence husbands are "disillusioned" and in "an ugly reactionary mood" even before the honeymoon has waned. Man for his part comes off lightly in the scoring. "Nine times out of ten he marries for love," and his motives "if selfish are generally as pure as is consistent with faulty humanity."

But do American marriages fail in fact? After all, only six-tenths of one per cent. of the 13,000,000 and more American wives are divorced. If Mrs. Rogers's indictment of her sex is true, it must be said for the men that they have accepted the inevitable with a good grace.

PROGRESS.

The arts and sciences advance at the sacrifice of beauty and aesthetic-ism. The steam locomotive, the most fascinating of mechanisms in the eyes of a boy, is gradually being lost to our youth. In place of its throbbing soul we are brought face to face with the lifeless electric motor. Instead of noble Percherons, Normandies, Clydesdales and Cleveland Bays hauling our merchandise we are rapidly getting used to autotrucks, which have no interest beyond the fact of their utility.

CHICAGO SITUATION IS QUIET

Number on Strike in Big City Said to Be Extremely Small.

Chicago, July 21.—Locally the strike situation regarding the walkout of the Grand Trunk conductors and trainmen is declared to be the same. That is not serious as yet. Freight traffic is still tied up at this end of the line and in the yards. The road's officials are refusing incoming freight, but the through passenger and suburban service is not interrupted.

It is not believed that the spreading of the strike will affect Chicago more seriously than it already has, as in the case of both roads a majority of the striking employes live at the other end of the line. Just how many men are out in Chicago employes of the Grand Trunk refuse to say, but they insisted the number was extremely small.

STRUCK BY TRAIN; MAY DIE

Railroad Hostler for Thirty-Four Years Hurt at Saginaw.

Saginaw, Mich., July 21.—James Murphy, aged 60, a hostler at the Pere Marquette roundhouse, was struck by the incoming Detroit passenger train, receiving injuries which may prove fatal. He stepped on the tracks at Fourth street directly in front of the oncoming train. His body was hurled some distance.

He was removed to St. Mary's hospital where examination showed that his right side was badly crushed, six ribs being broken. Murphy has been in the employ of the road for thirty-five years.

VICIOUS DOG ATTACKS LAD

Five-Year-Old Kalamazoo Boy Seriously Injured by Canine.

Kalamazoo, Mich., July 21.—Little 5-year-old Harold Thompson, son of Mr. and Mrs. John T. Thompson, was terribly injured when attacked by a dog. The boy was walking along a street near his home when a vicious canine jumped on him, knocking him to the ground.

Before the dog could be driven from his prostrate body the boys face had been bitten and torn and his arms were cut. It is believed he will die.

Mme. Rejane at Rehearsal.

Mme. Rejane at one of her rehearsals was endeavoring to impress upon a young actor the necessity of a tragic expression.

"Put yourself in his place," she said.

"But I have never been through such an experience," the other pleaded.

"Well, then," retorted the actress, "imagine you have lost 300 or 400 louis at baccarat and that you have been dismissed from the company."

His face fell.

"There you have it," said she. "Keep that expression and you will win."

For a young woman who could not weep to order she tried a heroic cure.

"Very well. I will take the part away from you. You are not pretty enough."

This had the desired effect, and the floodgates opened.

"Weep like that and you will be the hit of the piece," exclaimed Rejane triumphantly.—London M. A. P.

Balzac and Black Coffee.

Balzac was addicted to the use of strong black coffee and depended upon it as a nervous stimulant during the hours which he devoted to composition. Its effect he has himself described in these words:

"The coffee falls into your stomach. Immediately everything starts into action. Your ideas begin to move like Grand Army battalions on the battlefield, and the battle opens. Memories arrive at a run, standards flying; the light cavalry of comparisons breaks into a magnificent gallop; the artillery of logic dashes up and unlimbers; thoughts come rushing up as sharpshooters; characters spring up on all sides; the paper becomes covered with ink, for the struggle has begun and ends in torrents of black water like the battle in black powder."

Burns as a Tax Collector.

In the olden days candles were taxed articles, and it was the duty of Robert Burns as an excise officer to see that the tax was not evaded. He generally looked the other way, however, as when passing through the kitchen one night at William Lorimer's of Kennishall, where the gudewife was busy making candles, he merely remarked, "Faith, madam, ye're thrang the nicht," and passed into the parlor.—St. James' Gazette.

The Mountains Bother Them.

The British have had heaps of trouble in Siam to make the natives understand that the world is round instead of flat. Indeed, the native teachers keep on teaching the children that it is flat, and when argued with they reply, "If it isn't flat why do the mountains stand up as they do instead of rolling downhill?"

A Financier's Observation.

"He spends money like a prince," said the man who makes trite comparisons.

"Perhaps," replied Mr. Dustin Stax, "only most members of royal families I have met in my banking experience are more anxious to borrow money than to disburse it."—Washington Star.

A Paradox.

Little Willie—Say, pa, what is a paradox? Pa—Well, my son, a coal stove is one kind of paradox. It won't burn until it is put up; then it won't burn until it is shaken down.—Chicago News.

A Difference.

"I am told that Jones is a regular leech. Is that true?"

"No; I would hardly say that. A leech, you know, never gets stuck on himself."

Through the Cracks.

When the celebrated divine Edward Irving was on a preaching tour in Scotland two Dumfries men of decided opinions went to hear him. When they left the hall one said to the other:

"Well, Willie, what do you think?"

"Oh," said the other contemptuously, "the man's cracked!"

The first speaker laid a quiet hand on his shoulder.

"Will," said he, "you'll often see a light peeping through a crack."

RAWN SHOT AND KILLED IN HIS HOME

Death Is Shrouded in Deep Mystery.

HEAD OF MONON ROAD

Feared Result of Illinois Central Probe, Is Assigned as Cause

BURGLAR STORY IS DOUBTED

Three Theories Are Advanced Regarding Cause of Death.

Chicago, uly 21.—Ira G. Rawn, president of the Monon railroad, was shot to death in his summer home in Winnetka, Ill., at 1:30 o'clock Wednesday morning. Members of his family says he was murdered by a burglar. Others who hold to the burglar theory, believe Mr. Rawn may have started down stairs to meet a man, supposed to be in the house, but that instead of being shot by the burglar, he tripped in his night robe and accidentally pulled the trigger of his own revolver as he was falling. A third story, which is presented by members of the family and by subordinate officials of the Monon, was the Mr. Rawn took his own life, being prompted by worry and sleeplessness over scandals which have developed in the last few weeks in the affairs of the Western Indiana road of which Rawn is a director, and of the Illinois Central of which he was vice president in charge of operaton until last fall.

Mrs. Rawn says she was awakened shortly after 1 o'clock in the morning by a noise as of someone at a door downstairs. She told Mr. Rawn of the noise and he took his revolver, against her protest, and started quietly down the front stairway in his night dress. Mrs. Rawn followed to the head of the stairways. Two shots were fired, she said, and her husband fell moaning down the stairway.

Mr. Rawn lived only a few minutes and was unable to explain how he had been shot. An examination of the revolver he carried disclosed that it contained one empty cartridge. No bullet was found to substantiate the firing of a second shot. Members of the family suggested that the burglar also was shot but not in a vital place. In support of this idea they pointed to spots on a cement walk leading from the house, close examination of which disclosed that they were in all probability paint. The burglar clew is being pursued on the theory that no practiced night prowler is the guilty man.

Coroner Hoffman, after examining the night robe and wounds of the dead man, said the shot was fired from a weapon not over two or three feet away. Powder burns indicated this. This distance does not accord with the version given by family members.

Still another clew is that Mr. Rawn was the victim of an enemy who wished to get him out of the way for business reasons. In this connection the Illinois Central scandal is mentioned. Mr. Rawn was operating vice president of that road at the time the fraudulent car repair contracts came to light. A short time afterward he left the road and became president of the Monon.

Mr. Rawn was to have appeared next Tuesday as a witness in the Illinois Central cases which has twice been postponed at his suggestion. Mr. Rawn also is supposed to have known more than was comfortable for some who are involved in the affairs of the Western Indiana. On the ground that some one feared the revelations Mr. Rawn might make regarding these matters, the business enemy theory is based.

Dr. E. E. Blatchford, who was summoned after the shooting, said Mr. Rawn was shot just below the heart. He said Mr. Rawn was in excellent health of both body and mind and he scouted the theory of suicide as absurd. The family, he said, had forgotten to notify the police for sime time, and he suggested that this be done.

Springfield, Ill., July 21.—Gov. Deneen, on the recommendation of the state board of pardons, refused to commute the sentence of Robert Martin, who is to be hanged Friday for the murder of Floyd Harris at East St. Louis.

BIG TEXAS PEACH CROPS ROTS

Railroads Cannot Supply Cars to Take Care of Large Shipments.

Dallas, Tex., July 21.—Advices from Texas peach orchards indicate that a great portion of the crop, the largest in the history of the state, is rotting on the trees or in the packing cases awaiting shipment.

This is due, it is claimed, to the fact that the railroads are unable to supply refrigerator cars.

Madriz Issues Orders to "Shoot All Revolutionists."

Death of American Engineer Is Ordered by Secret Instructions, It Is Said—May Cause Trouble.

Bluefields, Via Wireless to Colon, July 21.—In official orders issued by President Madriz to his commanding officers, he gives instructions that "All prisoners, including Americans, shall be shot without mercy." The text of the message says: "Shoot without fear or consideration the revolutionists you may capture by attack and the prisoners you may have."

On top of this order comes a report from Managua, by way of Colon, that Madriz has given secret instructions for the execution of William Pittman, of Cambridge, Mass., who killed hundreds of Madriz soldiers by his mines when Madriz attacked Bluefields.

Reports reaching here from Acoyapa say that Gen. Mena is well prepared for an attack on the Madriz forces there. He will strike shortly. Then the Estrada attack on Managua will follow.

BRAVE DEATH IN OCEAN

Three Men Risk Life in Effort to Save Victims of Storm.

Two Coolly Climb Piling of Ocean Pier and Are Rescued—Two Men Are Drowned at Atlantic City.

Atlantic City, July 21.—Monster breakers, driven on the beach by a deep sea storm, claimed two victims and imperilled the lives of four more men, three of whom bravely manned a life boat to save the fourth before the arrival of the life guards and nearly lost their lives in the sea struggle.

The drowned men are: H. E. Bartow, of Philadelphia, and Daniel Gallagher, janitor of the Foster home, who was lost in the breakers immediately in front of that institution. Howard J. Spales, employe of a local hotel, who was caught by the undertow off Tennessee avenue, escaped death by his coolness and plucky fight against the sea, while Billy Goodson and J. C. Whooley of New York, and an unknown man who helped them to man a life boat to go after Spales, escaped by climbing up the piling of the ocean pier after their boat had been swept from under them.

She will leave for England in August and will meet her husband, Mr. Phillip Snowden, a member of parliament. She will later accompany him to this country.

BOLT HITS AEROPLANE

Spectacular Exhibition Occurs Near Barcelona, Spain.

Aviator Ehrmann's Machine Falls to the Ground After Being Struck but He Escapes.

Barcelona, Spain, July 20.—While he was making a cross-country flight Aviator Ehrmann's aeroplane was hit by lightning and fell to the ground. The aviator escaped uninjured, which is regarded as almost miraculous.

There has never been a more startling aerial exhibition than that which Ehrmann unwillingly afforded, and those who witnessed it could hardly believe their eyes when the airman emerged from the singed framework none the worse for his experience.

He was sailing along at a moderate height when he got in the path of a sky-bolt. Instantly the aeroplane was enveloped in flames, its canvas wings shriveled up, and clinging to the skeleton of his craft Ehrmann came down with a thud, but unhurt.

U. S. MARINES TO PROTECT TRIMMER

American Consul Moffat Sends Tacoma to Land Tars.

HONDURAS REVOLUTION STARTS

Madriz Official Organ Prints Scathing Denunciations of the State Department of the United States—Bonilla After Davila.

Washington, July 21.—According to advices received at the state department from Newton R. McCreery, American minister at Tegucigalpa, a revolution has started at Celba against President Davila of Honduras. There are about fifty insurgents. The government has sent troops against them. It is believed that the insurrectionary movement is for the purpose of getting Manuel Bonilla, former president of Honduras, back into the country. Several years ago, President Davila, aided by former President Zelaya of Nicaragua, drove Bonilla out of Honduras.

Thomas P. Moffatt, American consul at Bluefields, reported to the department that the situation at Cape Gracius Adios is critical. After a conference with Commander Harold K. Hines of the gunboat Dubuque, it was decided to send the gunboat Tacoma and a force of marines there to protect the American consul, Edwin W. Trimmer, who was said to be in danger. Mr. Moffatt said that he had reason to fear that Mr. Trimmer might be assaulted, as the Madriz governor and the other authorities at Cape Gracius Adios were constantly drunk and abusive. If conditions warrant, Mr. Moffatt said, a detachment of marines will be left there to protect the consul and American property.

Copies of Managua newspaper which have reached the state department continue their abusive attacks upon the present policy of the state department. On June 25 last, La Nacion of Managua, which is regarded as an official organ of the Madriz faction, printed this article:

"We Nicaraguans have some limited means to which we may resort as a final recourse if it comes to the point that the Yankee tries to execute his threat; let us lay hands on all the North Americans residing in Nicaragua and let us say to Mr. Taft: 'For each shot you hurl against us, a head of one of your countrymen shall roll on the ground.

"Another of the means to which we may resort in revenge for so great an injury, and for this I do not believe we are less able than the young Turks—let us organize in the form of a powerful coalition of active propaganda to the end that in all the Latin American countries no goods shall be purchased from the United States, making our people understand that this is the most efficacious method of combating the common enemy of our race so proud on account of its power, so insolent on account of its pride, and so detestable on account of its insolence."

THROAT CUT BY WIRE FENCE

Newbern Man Is in Critical Condition Following Runaway Accident.

Columbus, Ind., July 21.—Luther Lomar, 53 years old, is lying with his throat cut from ear to ear at his home in Newbern. His condition is critical.

While driving in a buggy his horse became frightened at a passing motorcycle and ran away. Lomar was thrown into a barber wire fence, which cut his throat. He received other serious wounds.

The Harm of Damp Houses.

It is dangerous to health and even to life in a damp, moldy house or one built over a moldy cellar. Many years ago the London Lancet in an article on diphtheria traced the disease in certain cases to the presence of certain molds and fungoid growths which seemed to be breathed into the throat. Remember, one of the best disinfectants is lime. Moldy cloths, such as shoes and other articles that are unfit for use, should be destroyed at once.

STRIKE SITUATION IS VERY PEACEFUL

Atwater Says Backbone of Strike Will Be Broken Soon.

FREIGHT TRAFFIC STILL TIED UP

Strikers Hold Usual Meetings but No Disturbances of Any Kind Is Reported Along Lines of Grand Trunk System.

Detroit, July 21.—There is but little change in the strike situation of the Grand Trunk trainmen, according to a stateemnt made by A. B. Atwater, assistant to the president. In addition to this Mr. Atwater asserts that the backbone of the strike will be broken by next Saturday. No attempt was made to operate freight trains on the road, though the railroad has a large number of strike-breakers about the Brush street station and on the docks and there are signs of activity.

There has been no disturbance in the past twenty-four hours. The strikers held their usual meetings and are conducting themselves in a placid manner. They are apparently making no attempt to dissuade strike-breakers. The police pacing the station platform say that there has not been the slightest sign of a disturbance.

"We do not expect to move any freight today, though eventually we will operate our freight trains as usual," said A. B. Atwater. "We are experiencing little difficulty in getting skillful men to take the places of the strikers. The employment agencies are reporting that they can secure men for us. There has been no trouble of any kind along the line of the road."

CANADIAN MAILS DELAYED

Government Offers to Pay Cost of Arbitration of the Dispute.

Ottawa, Ont., July 21.—Though industrial conditions throughout Canada are feeling the Grand Trunk trainmen's strike, so far there are no really serious results. The public is beginning to call on the labor department to settle the trouble, or try to. It is announced that the government would pay the costs of arbitration if the labor department will appoint an arbitration board of those concerned, and can get together. So far there is little sign of them doing so.

A serious feature of the strike has been the closing down of the Grand Trunk shops all over the system. These men had no grievances of any kind and get no strikers' pay. At the postoffice department it is said there have been no official complaints as to the mail service. "So far as we are advised," said Dr. Coulter, deputy postmaster general, the mails are being handled, but with delay in some cases."

More Appropriate.

"I teach my parrot only short words."

"Do you? Now, I should think that parrots were better adapted to learning polysyllables."

The Old Time English School.

Until comparatively recent times public school boys in England had many hardships to endure. As late as 1834 a writer who spoke from experience said that "the inmates of a workhouse or a jail were better fed and lodged than the scholars of Eton." Boys whose parents could not pay for a private room underwent privations that might have broken down a cabin boy and would be thought inhuman if inflicted on a galley slave.

"They rose at 5, winter and summer, and breakfasted four hours later, the interval being devoted to study, after they had swept their rooms and made their beds. The only washing accommodation was a pump. The diet consisted of an endless round of mutton, potatoes and beer, none of them too plentiful or too good.

"To be starved," says this writer, "frozen and flogged—such was the daily life of the scions of England's noblest families."

How a Maid Proposed Marriage for Her Mistress.

By E. A. MITCHEL.

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

A gentleman, handsomely dressed, alighted from a railway train at a suburban station and, going out to where carriages stood waiting, looked about for one he expected to meet him. Passing a landau in which sat a young woman in the costume of a maid, she called to him:

"Beg pardon, sir. Are you Mr. Jurnegan?"

"I am."

"I've been sent by Miss Whitehead to meet you."

"Indeed!"

"Yes, sir. Miss Whitehead was intending to come herself, but she was called away suddenly this morning."

Since it was a four hour journey each way Mr. Jurnegan decided to stay. But what was he to do to amuse himself till tomorrow? He and Miss Whitehead were both interested in an estate that was in litigation. Mr. Jurnegan's father and Miss Whitehead's uncle had been partners in business and had left their affairs in a tangle. Mr. Jurnegan seemed to have the best of the legal situation, and Miss Whitehead's attorney advised her to meet Mr. Jurnegan, whom she had never seen, and endeavor to effect a compromise. He strongly recommended her to marry him if she could. She had invited him to her home for a conference. As he rolled along he concluded to pump the maid.

"Does Miss Whitehead live alone?" he asked.

"Yes, sir, with a housekeeper for chaperon."

"Good mistress?"

"Very good—in some ways, sir."

"In what way?"

"Well, sir, there's nothing mean about her. She pays good wages and gives us days out quite often, besides lots of fine castoff clothing. But she's very independent, does things her own way, and the neighbors call her freaky."

There was nothing in this to help Mr. Jurnegan to an opinion as to whether he would be able to make a compromise favorable to his own interests or not, though the fact that Miss Whitehead was not mean looked well. On reaching her residence he alighted and was shown to his room by a manservant. There he made his toilet and went down to luncheon. After that he had a whole afternoon before him with nothing to do. Going on to the piazza, he lit a cigar. The maid came out with periodicals, which she placed on a table near him.

"Miss Whitehead told me I was to do my best to make your waiting as easy as possible, sir."

"I don't know how you can do that better than by telling me about Miss Whitehead," he responded. "Sit down and tell me what she is like."

The girl demurred at seating herself near a gentleman, but agreed that if he would permit her to get her needlework she would answer any questions he might ask. He gladly consented and on her return began his inquiries.

"How old is Miss Whitehead?"

"I don't know, sir. She might be thirty."

"Thirty! I heard she was not more than twenty-two."

"She looks it anyway."

"Good looking?"

"Oh, no, sir! Miss Whitehead is not good looking."

"Then she's very stupid to have so pretty a maid. The contrast is detrimental to her own appearance."

Naturally the maid was pleased at this compliment. She bent her head over her work and said nothing.

"I fancy," pursued Jurnegan, "that your mistress must rely on you for more than the duties of a maid or she would not have intrusted you with keeping me here till her return?"

"I sometimes act as secretary for her."

"Indeed!"

"Yes, sir, and she likes to talk over her business affairs with me. You see, she has no one else to talk with about them."

"She wouldn't talk with you very long about them if she didn't get valuable hints from you."

At this moment a telegraph messenger boy came in at the gate and delivered a dispatch. The maid opened and read it.

"It's from Miss Whitehead," she said. "She is uncertain about her return and would like you to make her a proposition through me."

"I told you so. She has recognized in you a head for business."

Mr. Jurnegan was a clear headed man and one who acted on broad and liberal principles. He laid down the business situation between himself and Miss Whitehead showing that their interests were identical, that they must manage harmoniously the property in which they were jointly interested. He was proceeding when the maid interrupted him.

"It seems to me, sir," she said, "that by far the best arrangement to be made is for you and Miss Whitehead to marry. I hope you'll never tell her I proposed such a thing. If you do I'll lose my place."

"I had often thought of that myself," said Jurnegan, naturally surprised. "But I am opposed to marrying a woman older than myself. You say that Miss Whitehead is thirty and homely?"

"I am not a judge of beauty. You might think her fairly good looking."

"It takes two to make a bargain. What do you think Miss Whitehead would say to your plan?"

"She favors it."

"Favors it?"

"Yes, sir. She has told me several times that it's the only way of making a satisfactory permanent settlement."

"Oh, I see. Miss Whitehead, having such an opinion, prefers to let it be known through another. I'm inclined to think she went away on purpose to enable me to get it through you."

"You're right, sir. The story about her aunt was made up."

"Well, upon my word! You're very frank about it. But, while Miss Whitehead, you say, favors a settlement by marriage, it doesn't mean that she would settle it in that way without seeing me, and if she sees me she might decide that no such settlement is possible."

"I think that part of it would be all right, sir."

"Why so?"

"Well, Miss Whitehead is a very sensible and a very practical woman. She is also peculiar and has some strange notions. She thinks that love often blinds us to our best interests. She went away resolved that if this settlement by marriage be agreed to by you her consent would depend entirely on my report of you."

"The dickens she did! That beats anything of the kind I ever heard of as coming from a woman."

"Miss Whitehead, as I told you, is very peculiar."

"I should think she is, leaving the question of her acceptance of a life partner to her maid."

"But, under the circumstances, don't you think, sir, that it shows a certain depth of wisdom?"

"I don't know but it does."

"Well, sir, since my mistress has left her part in the matter to me it is settled. Now, what shall I say to her as to your part?"

"You can say that I am so astonished at this remarkable method of bringing about a settlement that I don't know what to say. It's my opinion that you have furnished the brains to concoct such a plan. If you were making the proposition on your own behalf I would say, 'It's a go.' As it is I must see Miss Whitehead before giving an answer."

"Very well, sir; I will telegraph her to come at once."

"How long will she be coming?"

"She will be here for dinner."

With that the maid arose, remarked that the periodicals on the table were of the latest issue and left him. Instead of reading them he got up and walked about the grounds. He saw nothing, however, his mind being entirely taken up with this remarkable turn in his affairs. The maid had doubtless been instructed to say that Miss Whitehead was older than she was and plain looking. It would not do for her as her mistress' spokesman to say that she was young and beautiful. He was very impatient to see this practical and peculiar lady and sincerely hoped that he would find her prepossessing since much depended upon whether he could bring himself to marry her. But he could not divest himself of admiration at the way her maid had acquitted herself of so delicate a mission. Indeed, he was remarkably pleased at both the plan and the manner in which it had been carried out. But the as yet unseen Miss Whitehead—would her appearance correspond with her talent for diplomacy or her maid's diplomacy?

Every ten or fifteen minutes he took out his watch to note the time, which dragged heavily. Between 5 and 6 o'clock he went to the house and asked a servant what time dinner would be served. He was informed that Mrs. Whitehead usually dined at 7. Then he inquired if Miss Whitehead had returned. There was no need for him to ask this question, for he had been watching all the afternoon to see her drive up. When he received a negative reply he sent for the maid-secretary and asked her if she were sure her mistress would return in time for dinner.

"She will surely be here, sir," was the reply. "I think it is time for you to dress for dinner, sir. Miss Whitehead always expects her guests to wear evening dress for dinner."

With that Mr. Jurnegan went up to his room. It was in the rear of the house, so that he could not see Miss Whitehead's arrival, but since her maid had so definitely informed him that she would come in time for dinner he dismissed the matter from his mind. At half past 6 he heard carriage wheels grinding on gravel. His heart throbbed. She had come.

A few minutes before 7 Mr. Jurnegan went downstairs. At 7 punctually the butler announced dinner.

"But where is Miss Whitehead?" asked the guest.

"You will find her in the dining room."

Thinking the lady had naturally put off their meeting till the last moment from motives of delicacy, Mr. Jurnegan went into the dining room. A young lady in evening dress advanced to meet him. He stopped and looked upon her, surprised. He saw the maid-secretary in the costume of her mistress.

"Your mistress has not arrived after all, I suppose, and you are to take her place."

"Are you disappointed?"

"Disappointed! I'm delighted!"

"I will not deceive you any longer. I am Miss Whitehead."

Jurnegan stared at her in mute astonishment for a few moments, then when he found his tongue said:

"Your proposition is accepted."

UNIQUE PAYMENT

Rent of Manhiem Church Paid by Rose

In the early days of the settlement of Penn., one Baron Henry William Stiegel of Manhiem, Germany presented to the Congregation a site for a church, the deed was executed Dec. 4, 1772, the consideration was an annual rental of one red rose ptyable in July when the same shall be lawfully demanded. This was faithfully paid except for a few years, in 1891 it was revived and since then the rose has been paid to some lineal descendant of the Baron; falling this year to Miss Bayer and she received the rental as was agreed upon so many years ago.

Tender skins are bound to be affected by the increased amount of poison in the copious perspiration thrown off during hot weather. Rashes, hives, blotches, pimples, prickly heat result. Often too, serious skin troubles begin this way

To wash away the poison entirely, to clean and cool the skin, make an application of a simple solution of wintergreen with thymol, known as D. D. D. Prescription. Doctors prescribe this D. D. D. Prescription for eczema. It is sold for the purpose in dollar bottles, but we can give you for 25 cents enough D. D. D. to keep your skin fresh and clean from summer blemishes.

If there is any itch this wintergreen lotion will take it away instantly, the very second it is applied to the skin. We assure you of this for we have seen the result with D. D. D.

THE BROOKLYN TABERNACLE BIBLE STUDIES

MOUNT TABOR'S PARABOLIC VISION.

Matthew 17:1-8; 14-20.—July 24.

"This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; hear ye him."

SIX days after our Lord's words concluding our last study, he took Peter, James and John, three of his favorites among the disciples, into a high mountain. There he was transfigured before them; that is to say, his appearance changed, his face shone like the sun, his garments were white like the light. Then the vision grew and Moses and Elijah appeared to be holding conversation with the transfigured Jesus. The impulsive St. Peter, anxious to serve, inquired whether or not it was the Master's will that they build three tabernacles; one for him, one for Moses and one for Elijah, on the top of the mountain. One of the evangelists says, "He knew not what he said." Another account shows that the three disciples were for a time overwhelmed by something like drowsiness but later became fully awake.

It was on this occasion that they heard a voice from the heavens, saying, "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased; hear ye him." It required our Lord's kind words and touch to relieve the Apostles of their fright, and looking up they saw no one but Jesus. His transfiguration had vanished, and it was the Master, just as before. If, momentarily, they thought that Jesus had entered into glory, they now perceived that they were mistaken. Another account tells us that as they were coming down the mountain side Jesus charged them that they should not tell the vision to any one until after his resurrection from the dead. He thus explained to them that the whole matter was a vision, an apparition. This was a fulfillment of what he had told them in his last words of our lesson of a week ago, "There be some standing here which shall not taste of death till they see the Son of man coming in his Kingdom." These three disciples had been standing in his presence at the time those words were uttered, and now they had seen the Son of man in his Kingdom glory—in vision. The reality of that vision has not yet come to pass, although it is surely nigh, even at the door.

St. Peter himself declares that they accepted the vision as a corroboration of our Lord's assurance of his coming Kingdom. In his Epistle he says, "We have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus, but were eye witnesses of his majesty [his kingdom], when we were with him in the holy mount." (II Peter 1:16, 18). Yet the Apostle proceeds to tell us that this vision, helpful as it was at the time, became secondary as he came to a better understanding of the prophecy which more particularly describes our Lord's second coming and Kingdom. He says, "We have a more sure word of prophecy [a more sure evidence than the vision] to which we do well to take heed as unto a lamp that shines in a dark place until the day dawn"—until the Millennial morning dawn.—II Peter 1:19.

Before leaving the story of the transfiguration, which symbolized our Lord's Kingdom glory, we note his gracious words to the affrighted disciples, "Arise, and be not afraid." On several occasions he thus addressed them. It would appear that by nature many of us have a consciousness of our own imperfections and a realization of our unworthiness of Divine favor; and fears are likely to grasp us and torture us. This is because we do not know our heavenly Father. The more we learn of him the more does the love of God cast out fear from our hearts, and assure us that he who created us is sympathetic towards all who are striving for righteousness. He is a great God, not a little one. True, he will not give his greatest blessings to any except those who come into harmony with him, but, on the other hand, he is not a demon that he should be feared as such. He takes no pleasure in the suffering of his creatures and will not permit that any should suffer eternally, therefore his provision that all shall have, through Christ, an opportunity for regaining perfection and eternal life, and that whosoever will not avail himself of this great privilege must die the second death—must be annihilated.

While Jesus and the three favored Apostles were in the mount of transfiguration, supposed to have been Mount Tabor, at the foot of the mountain there was a man whose son was a lunatic, whom he had brought that the Lord might expel the demon. The Apostles had already been out, as the Lord's representatives, in various parts of the country of Palestine, curing the sick and expelling demons in his name; so they assayed to cast out this demon but could not. The Revised Version speaks of the sufferer as an epileptic. Indeed, all higher criticism disputes that there is such a thing as obsession by evil spirits. It is a common saying today among the Higher Critics that what our Lord and the Apostles mistook for demon possession was merely insanity, epilepsy, etc. Of course the word disease is broad enough to cover any kind of ailment, whether it be a direct affection from the Adversary, or an indirect one through heredity. In either case there is loss of ease, dis-ease, discomfort. We, however, have more confidence in the wisdom of the Lord and his chosen Apostles and mouth-pieces than we have in all the Doctors of theology and Doctors of medicine in the whole earth. We therefore accept this narrative just as it reads, that Jesus rebuked the "devil" and cast him out of the boy, who was cured from that very hour.

The disciples who had been unsuccessful in casting out this demon, called the Master away from the hearing of the multitude and asked him why they had failed when they attempted to cast out the demon. He replied, "Because of your little faith." Another account says that he stated, "This kind cometh not out except by fasting and prayer." In other words, the lesson to the Apostles was that their greatest power would result from their living very near to God, living lives of self-denial and prayer. Of course, fasting to be seen of men is not here inculcated, nor do we suggest that the works of penance on the part of disciples would make them more efficient in the understanding of the Lord's mystery; rather the thought is, the nearer one lives to God the more of the Divine power may be exercised by and through him.

It is perhaps difficult for us to understand our Lord's reference to their having little faith, for they surely exercised considerable faith in making an attempt to cast out the demon. Faith, to be successful, must be backed by spiritual power; and our Lord assures us that even with a small amount of faith we would be able to remove a mountain and nothing would be impossible. We are not to suppose that our Lord meant that his followers should try to remove mountains as a diversion, nor as a proof of their faith, for by so doing they would be seriously interfering with the interests of others who would be more convenienced by having the mountain remain. This they would have no right to do. We assume therefore that the thought must be that if in the fulfillment of the Divine command it should be necessary to have a mountain removed, and if the commission had been given to one of the Lord's followers to remove the mountain, and if he could exercise the faith to obey the command, the result would correspond to the faith exercised. All that the majority of us could do would be to exercise as much faith as possible and ask the Lord for more, and pray God to cultivate a greater degree of faith.

THE ANNUAL GRANGE PIONIC

At Devils Lake August 4

The annual Grange Picnic will be held August 4 in Pleasant Grove at Devil's lake. This has grown to be one one of the leading features of the year at Devils Lake, and all things else being equal we doubt not that this 10th anniversary will be as great a success as have those preceeding ones.

The principle address will be given by the Hon. J. W. Helme of Adrian, followed by a choice program of music, recitations, etc. A ball game in the afternoon will be a drawing card.

Pres. L. S. Mann, assisted by Sec. Julia Reed, are making many plans whereby this may be the very best picnic ever. Everybody invited to come and help make merry.

Sunday School Picnic

A very enjoyable picnic was that held at the Parish house grounds Wednesday afternoon for the Sunday School of St Peters church. The day was everything that could be desired for a picnic, and about 60 were in attendance. A bountiful dinner was served in regulation picnic style. Old and young alike had a very pleasant time.

MICHIGAN NEWS.

Lansing Mich., July 21.—The state railroad commission has taken steps whereby the upper peninsula is to secure relief from the excess baggage evil. Under the ruling from the railroad commission [illegible] railroads are given 20 days in which to file new schedules complying with the rate made by the commission.

Many complaints have been received that the roads were charging exorbitant prices for carrying excess baggage and that in some cases they had refused to check the excess beyond the junction points with other roads.

The new schedule affects all railroads whether they operate under the two or three cent fare. This provides for a minimum rate of 25 cents for excess baggage and for the following rates for from one to 400 miles. The minimum rate is from one to 10 miles at eight cents per 100, while the maximum rate quoted is from 391 to 400 miles, when the charge may legally be placed at $1.30 per 100 lbs. The commission also rules that every road must check excess baggage through to the point of destination for which ticket is purchased.

A SHORT LETTER FROM W. P. STOCKING

Editor of Herald:

"So dear to my heart are the scenes of my childhood,
When fond recollection present them to view," that I never weary of writing or talking about them. Am I too sentimental? I would not want to live in a world where sentiment was dead

Sometime ago I received a letter from an old gentleman who was director of a rural school which I taught three winters, in answer to one I had written him telling of the very pleasant memories I still had of those winters spent with the boys and girls of the district, etc., etc. He began his letter with "As there was so much sentiment in your letter he had been waiting for a like fit to strike him but as it hadn't done so he would not wait longer," and then proceeded with a concise history of changes that had taken place in the school and the people which was very interesting to me but there was not a sentence of sentiment in it. I knew the man so well that I was not in the least surprised and it did not make me ashamed of the sentiment in my letter.

Now may I tell the younger readers of the Herald of some of the good times we, as teachers and pupils of that school, had during the time we were together? It is a very simple little story but it is taken from real life.

In the fall of 1870, after being out of the teachers' harness for nine years at the suggestion of the county superintendent, an old class mate of mine in the Dowagiac Mich., schools, I concluded to take up the work again.

Driving through the country in search of a school I came across a neat, new schoolhouse situated on a little eminence just at the edge of a young growth of timber. I was so favorably impressed with the appearance of things that I immediately sought out the officers and secured the consent of two, who signed the consent of two who signed the contract but the third, a German, refused to sign because of the wages, $35 per month and board, I was to "board around." As I had the contract signed by the director and moderator I took the school.

I had contracted for three months. Before the first week was gone I wished I was out of it; before the first month was gone I was glad I was there; at the end of the third month I had been asked by all concerned to stay the fourth, and at the end of the of the fourth month I contracted for the second winter.

After the second winter I concluded to accept an offer of a school at better wages and so near home that I could board at home. The next winter I was asked to go back to my old position at an increase in wages and the privilege of boarding myself. Accepting this offer, we rented a couple of rooms near the school house and spent the pleasantest winter of our rural school life.

Right here I would like to relate some of the little incidents, grave and gay, that occurred during those three winters, but await the consent of the editor.

KNIGHTS TEMPLAR

TRIENNIEL CONCLAVE OF U. S.

Sir Knight Gen. Fred B. Wood One of the Marshalls in the Big Parade

Chicago is putting on her holiday attire for one of the greatest meetings ever held. The triennial conclave of the Knights Templar of the United States.

They expect no less than 500,000 men and women to be the guests of Chicago during the week beginning August seventh. The committee of Knights who have the work in hand are sparing with neither money or labor to make this the greatest display ever known at home or abroad under the leadership of Sir Knight John B. Cleveland. The program will open on Sunday afternoon Aug. seventh, with impressive religous services at Orchestra Hall, Sir Knight, the Rev. George H. McAdam of Madison Wis. presiding. The Grand Encampments of Sir Knights will march in a body.

Amusements and attractions of every kind are being provided for the many guests. Sir Knight Gen. Fred B. Wood has been appointed one of the marshalls in the big parade, and with his wife expect to spend the week in Chicago. The Adrian Commandery are considering the possibility of thus attending the conclave.

No doubt many will attend outside the order.

Chautauqua

Up to date every body has been more than delighted with the entertainments that have been given.

Every thing has been of the very best. The Lyric Glee Club of last evening was exceptionally fine, it is seldom one finds a quartette of young men with such a versitality of talent. The singing touched each heart the playing was fine and as impersonators they were a howling success. The Lecture of Dr. Gringle in the afternoon was pronounced by every one who heard it as one of the best of the Course.

Tonight the great treat of the whole week will be Captain Hobson and we look for a crowded house.

Surely the promoters of this enterprize deserve credit and should meet with a generous response from the citizens of Tecumseh when they plan for another year.

THE NEW BUSINESS

The Old Agricultural Works

We have been pleased to mark the improvements that are going on about us and today we wish to call you attention to tha good work that is being done by Brown & Co., in these old works. A new set of windows from top to bottom on the west side is a decided change from the demiralized ones that have so long been in evidence. The north east corner has been decorated with new paint on its walls and when the furniture is placed will be as fine a business office as one could desire. The upper floor is to be used for the display of buggies etc.

They have already begun to move their grain and feed and as soon as the scales are installed the coal will also be moved to the new quarters everything looks fair for a fine business.

The foundation for the scales is being laid and a few days more will be ready for use.

A REAL CORNCOB PIPE

Has the Best Havana-Made Beaten to a Frazzle.

The annual crop of "Missouri meerschaums" is valued at $450,000 whole sale invoice. The article is a corncob pipe made by steam and a more or less complicated machinery. The finished pipe and stem are saturated with an abominable glue that takes from the nicotine of the tobacco half or more of its indescribable enchantment.

Your real cob pipe, such as General Simon Bolivar Buckner enjoys, lends a charm, a magic to the man who smokes that no Havana cigar ever imparted. It is conducive to reverie and pleasing thoughts. It is the real pipe of peace. The cob must not be steamed before the pipe is fashioned, but seasoned by the influence of a late autumn and early winter atmosphere.

Imagine in the Kentucky Pennyriles of "'tis 60 years since" an old colored five shelling corn for "a turn o' meat." He sets aside some dozen of the cobs that suit his fancy. These he makes into pipes with deft and cunning hand with sharp knife he has employed to scrape "basket splits." When "stripping" tobacco his master had allowed him to choose 25 or 30 pounds of the pick of the crop. This was left in bulk the entire winter and when in early June it went into "sweat" it was sprayed with old peach brandy, in which new honey was dissolved. Then it was twisted and laid away in an old, dry oak "chist" till fall.

Archie, the old servitor, who, if he had ever quoted De Quincy's "O Abner, fear God and nothing else," would have qualified it thus, "except my wife, Car'line." Car'line was the cook, and ruled Archie as their master never did. Along in the late October, Archie would sit down to a supper of potlicker, cabbage or black eyed pea, his appetite whetted by a generous hog driver of plain whisky his master had rewarded him with and he would eat and eat and eat potlicker, cornbread, sweet 'taters, and okra, and drink and drink and drink fresh, cool buttermilk.

After that he would load his corncob pipe with the tobacco he had stored away and smoke and smoke and smoke.

If it was good possum weather he summonged every boy on the place, white and black, and went with dog into the swamp, where he rarely failed of his mission. Otherwise he told the chaps tales like Uncle Remus was delivered of. That was luxury; it was happiness!—Washington Post.

Japan has 32 timepiece factories, of which 25 are in Nagoya, one in Tokio and six in Osaka. The annual output is 209,702 standing clocks, 441,755 hanging clocks, 25,360 watches, representing a value of $751,900.

Free Sample For Baby's Ills

Something can and must be done for the puny, crying baby, for the child that refuses to eat and is restless in its sleep. And since the basis of all health is the proper working of the digestive organs, look first to the condition of the stomach and bowels.

A child should have two full and free movements of the bowels a day. This emptying of the bowels is very important, as with it comes a clear head, a lightness of step, good appetite and sound sleep. But it is equally important to know what to give the child in the emergency of constipation and indigestion. Cathartics are too strong and salts and other purgatives are not only too strong, but the child refuses them because of their bad taste. Have you ever tried Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin? It is a liquid tonic that families have been using for a quarter of a century. It is mild, pleasant-tasting and promptly effective. It is good for you as well as the child, but there is nothing better to be found for children. They like its taste—you will not have to force them to take it.

First of all, if you have not yet used it, Dr. Caldwell would like to send you a sample bottle free of charge. In this way you can try it before buying. Later, when convinced of its merits, you can get it of your druggist at fifty cents and one dollar a bottle, just as thousands of other families are doing. The family of Mr. D. W. Spangler of Strattonville, Pa., as well as that of Mr. A. F. Johnson of Walnut Grove, Tenn., started with it in that way and now write that it is their one family necessity next to food itself. If you are unfortunate enough to have a sickly child, one given to constipation and indigestion, you should send for a free sample of this remedy.

Dr. Caldwell personally will be pleased to give you any medical advice you may desire for yourself or family pertaining to the stomach, liver or bowels absolutely free of charge. Explain your case in a letter and he will reply to you in detail. For the free sample simply send your name and address on a postal card or otherwise. For either request the doctor's address is Dr. W. B. Caldwell, R.500 Caldwell building, Monticello, Ill.

The Safest Place.

A British railway train is the safest place on earth, as only one passenger in every 70,000,000 is killed and one in every 2,300,000 injured. This deduction is based upon a careful survey of the Board of Trade report on railway accidents during the year 1907. Last year the number of fires in trains amounted to 170, but it should be explained that many of these were of the most trifling description. It is a significant fact that of the number of fires reported not a solitary one occurred either directly or indirectly through a lightning flash. It would appear that for some reason railway trains are practically immune from the disastrous effects which usually marked the track of a violent thunderstorm.

What is the explanation of this fact? In reply we are told, first, that the telegraph poles alongside the railway provide a measure of protection to passing trains. These poles are usually spaced three chains, or 66 yards apart, and on each pole is stapled a thick galvanized-iron wire, projecting about six inches above the pole roof and terminating five or six feet below ground. This earth wire, as it is technically known, tends primarily to prevent conduction between contiguous wires, but there can be no doubt that it also serves as a lightning conductor, and that, too, in a very efficient manner.

Further, it is contended that the pieces of iron work scattered over the roof of a train constitute a conductor to act as a safeguard against the injurious effects of atmospheric electricity.—Railway Magazine.

"Ha!" cried the nervous woman, starting from her slumber. "There is a burglar in the house! What shall we do?"

"Let us put our heads together," suggested the resourceful woman.

"It is impossible!" the nervous woman gasped after a short struggle.

Her hair, to be sure, hung on the bedpost, but where were her teeth?—Newark Star.

A man once asked Thackeray to lend him five shillings, which he would convert into £20,000. Asked how, he explained that he knew a young woman with £20,000 whom he knew would marry him if he asked her, but he had pawned his teeth, and wanted five shillings to redeem them, in order to propose effectively.—T. Some Tecumseh People Fully Realize It Now

When the back aches from kidney ills.
When urinary troubles annoy you.
There's a certain way to find relief;
A sure way to be cured.
Doan's Kidney Pills will do it.
Tecumseh people endorse this claim.

Mrs. Jeanett Teachout, N. Oneida street, Tecumseh, Mich., says: "I again take pleasure in recommending Doan's Kidney Pills to persons afflicted with kidney trouble. Last fall my kidneys became disordered and I suffered from pains in the small of my back. If I stooped sharp twinges seized me and for a few seconds I was unable to straighten. Too frequent passages of kidney secretions also annoyed me greatly and the doctor was unable to help me. Doan's Kidney Pills were so highly spoken of that I procured a box and began their use. I was so promptly relieved that I continued taking the remedy until my trouble had disappeared."

ANSWER

One—the flat, sad, sickly looking one—was baked with poor baking powder; possibly the high price kind—possibly the cheap, big can kind. It denotes a lack of leavening gas, or an uneven distribution of same—or both. The other—the large, light, fluffy one—was prepared with Calumet Baking Powder, and denotes the never-failing, delicious baking that always results from its use.

Calumet does not cost as much as the high price baking powder, but it is very much superior in every way—it is purer—more reliable—more healthful. Here are the reasons:

All baking powders undergo a chemical change in the process of baking. You do not take it into the stomach in the same form as it is in the can. For example: When you use Cream of Tartar Baking Powder you get Rochelle Salts in your food, because the Cream of Tartar during this reaction turns into Rochelle Salts. This, as you know, is a drug, and should be taken only under doctor's orders.

Calumet is so carefully and scientifically prepared, that the neutralization of the ingredients is absolutely perfect.

That it is absolutely pure and of highest quality is proven by the fact that

It is a great honor for her and for our city. She is one of the remarkable women of our country, so sane and kindly in her judgements and so wise in her knowledge of human nature. She has won the admiration of every one by the way in which she rules our 400,000 school children and 15,000 teachers and instructors. Pottery and Secrecy.

In the royal manufactory of pottery at Meissen, Saxony, the work was formerly carried on with the utmost secrecy to prevent the processes from becoming known elsewhere. The establishment was a complete fortress, the portcullis of which was not raised day or night, no stranger being permitted to enter for any purpose whatever. Every workman, even the chief inspector, was sworn to silence. This injunction was formally repeated every month to the superior officers employed, while the workmen had constantly before their eyes in large letters the warning motto, "Be Secret Unto Death." It was well known that any person divulging the process would be imprisoned for life in the castle of Koenigstein. Even the king himself when he took strangers of distinction to visit the works was enjoined to secrecy. One of the foremen, however, escaped and assisted in establishing a manufactory in Vienna, from which the secrets spread all over Germany.

SHIPS SAIL FOR BLUEFIELDS

Secretary Knox Does Not Regard Blockade as a Binding One.

New Orleans, July 25.—The Norwegian steamships Imperator and Dictator, which have remained here more than a week because of the action of Norway in recognising the Madriz blockade of Bluefields, have sailed for that port in accordance with the declaration of the United States state department that Bluefields is an open port, and the blockade a mere paper one and not binding.

Norway has not yet changed her position in regard to the Bluefields blockade, but the Norwegian owners of these vessels, which are chartered by Americans, regard the ruling of Secretary Knox as assuming the protection to the boats and their cargoes.

Reptiles' Eggs.

Reptiles' eggs are not very attractive objects, in the case of crocodiles and many kinds of tortoises they are pale colored or white and resemble those of birds in shape. But the egg of the gopher tortoise is remarkable for its complete roundness. It might well be mistaken for a golf ball. Many snakes' eggs are soft skinned, brown as to color and look for all the world like a number of new potatoes.—Scientific American.

BONILLA UPRISING PROVES A FIASCO

Steps Being Taken to Head Off Warlike Expedition.

TRAITOR SPOILS WHOLE PLOT

President Davila Gets Tip of Impeding Trouble and Sends Troops to Cope With Situation—Many Bonilla Adherents Taken.

New Orleans, July 25.—Conditions in Honduras relative to the reported revolution was somewhat cleared by the announcement that the Bonilla revolution movement had proved a fiasco. The Norwegian steamer Utstein did carry, it is claimed, ammunition and arms, the arms being intended for the expedition headed by Gen. Bonilla, which slipped out of British Honduras in two schooners despite the precautions of the British colonial officials. The arms were transhipped to these schooners in mid-ocean. It appears, however, that the revolutionary movement was betrayed; that the Honduras government was tipped off and sent 2,000 well armed soldiers to the Atlantic coast and thereby precipitated the premature uprising at Cieba.

The expedition from Mobile was headed by Col. Floridan Davidi, who slipped away on the Utstein with a large quantity of arms and ammunition he received from a small sailing vessel just outside the bar in Mobile bay.

At a point in the Caribbean sea, the Utstein met two schooners chartered by Bonilla and transferred her cargo of war supplies to them. Then she proceeded south, presumably for Nicaragua. The schooners landed the munitions of war on the coast of Honduras at a point of rendezvous.

An uprising, large in its scope and thorough in its details, was planned by Manuel Bonilla, but a traitor was taken into the councils. He informed the government of Honduras of the plans and as a result troops were ordered to the coast line, while police activities and garrisons in the interior were doubled and trebled.

As a result of this, and a miscarriage in other plans, the entire scheme failed. When Manuel Bonilla sailed from Belize, and Davidi loaded the guns and ammunition on the Utstein is not known. None of the leaders in the plot are alive to the danger, and it is said steps are being taken to head off the Bonilla expedition before it comes to grief by landing in Honduras, where the Davili trap was fully prepared to receive it.

Cablegrams received by the friends of Bonilla here declare the friends of Bonilla were arrested by the wholesale as a precautionary measure.

FIND 6 LEITER MINE BODIES

In Hearing.

They stood upon the crest of the mountain and gazed off through the purple distances.

"Darling," he whispered, bending closer, "give me a kiss—just one!"

"No, Clarence," she answered timidly: "some one will hear us. There may be other ears around."

"Other ears! Why should you think so, dearest?"

"Oh, because I have so often heard of mountaineers I thought perhaps there might be some around, and"—

But just then there was a mighty crash. A mountain goat had heard the awful pun and jumped over the cliff.—London Tatler.

WARSHIP FOR ESTRADA

Gunboat Hornet Sold to the Nicaragua Rebels.

Was Originally Purchased by United States Government at the Outbreak of Spanish War.

Norfolk, Va., July 25.—Bound for New Orleans and thence to Nicaragua the converted gunboat Hornet, formerly owned by the United States government, sailed from this port.

It is generally understood that the Hornet will enter the service of the insurgents under Estrada and will be pitted against the gunboat Venus.

The Hornet was purchased by Isodore Stern and Thomas B. Roberts of New Orleans and fitted out at a local shipyard. The price paid was $5,000. The yacht was purchased by the United States government at the outbreak of the Spanish-American war for $275,000 and served in the navy during the conflict.

PANIC FOLLOWS BOMB BLAST

Explosion Causes Tenement Dwellers to Rush Into the Street.

New York, July 25.—A panic followed the explosion of a bomb thrown on the sidewalk in front of a five story tenement on Second avenue. The bomb dug a hole a foot and a half in diameter in the street, blew out the glass in windows and upset things generally in stores in the neighborhood.

Hundreds of tenement dwellers hastened into the street in terror, the panic spreading for a block.

None of the tenants would admit having received Black Hand letters.

MANY ALIENS ARE SENT BACK

All Records at Ellis Island Have Been Broken in Six Months.

New York, July 25.—All records in deportation at Ellis island have been broken in the past six months. More than 10,000 immigrants have been sent back in that period, while in previous years the deportations have not exceeded 7,000 a year.

One of the latest undesirables to be deported is a young Englishman who was sentenced a year ago to the Elmira reformatory for robbing the guests of a fashionable New York hotel.

GENERAL GRANT GOES EAST

He Will Assume Command of the Department of the East.

Chicago, July 25.—Major General Frederick Dent Grant, U. S. A., completed his work in Chicago as commander of the department of the lakes and will now assume command at Governor's island over the department of the east. The change is made upon orders from the war department in Washington.

General Grant's transfer is to the most important assignment in the army. He succeeds Major General Leonard Wood, his colyreunking officer in the United States army.

ONE KILLED, 2 HURT BY LOG

Falls from Running Train and Crashes Through Way Car.

Wolverine, Mich., July 25.—A log rolled from a running log train on the Hulkwood branch near here. One end struck the ground and the other swung about and crashed through the way car, killing L. Maurer and injuring H. Spencer, conductor, and Sam Shaffer, brakeman.

Schaffers leg was broken and Spencer sustained a bruised hip and internal injuries. Maurer leaves a wife and two young children.

Perfumes in Ancient Days.

Old as the history of the world itself is that of the queen of flowers. The ancient Greeks and Romans reveled in roses. They were used lavishly at their feasts. In the time of the republic the people had their cups of Falernian wine swimming with blooms, and the Spartan soldiers after the battle of Cirrha refused to drink any wine that was not perfumed with roses, while at the regatta of Baiae the whole surface of the Lucrine lake was strewn with flowers.

"Why, the fellow can't make enough money to support you."

BOY LOSES LIFE IN ELEVATOR CAR

Son of Janitor of Willow Court Victim of Accident.

HEAD WAS HORRIBLY MANGLED

Had Been Warned of Danger but Persisted in Fun of Running Passenger Car in Exclusive Apartment.

New York, July 25.—Benton Moulton's mother sat in the janitor's apartment in the basement of the Willow Court apartments at Willow and Clark streets, Brooklyn, playing with her daughter's baby and fanning its heat reddened face. Her husband, William Moulton, is the janitor of the big apartment house. Mrs. Moulton heard the elevator carriage drop from the first floor to the basement and looked up as her 15-year-old son, Benton, appeared in the doorway of the apartment.

"Are you running the elevator, Benton?" she said.

"Percy said he had to go out for lunch, mother, and he let me have the switchboard and elevator while he was gone."

"Well, you oughtn't to do it," said Mrs. Moulton. "You're too young and you're likely to get hurt. Your father has told you to let that elevator alone."

Somebody was calling on the telephone. Benton heard a buzzing from the switchboard. He ran out and Mrs. Benton heard the carriage start and stop suddenly. A maid called from the first floor.

"Is Mr. Moulton there?" she cried. "Tell him to come upstairs quick."

"My God," cried Mrs. Moulton, dropping the baby, "that boy is hurt."

"You stay right here," said Moulton. "Don't you go out until I come back."

He ran upstairs and saw at a glance that his son was dead. The boy's body, crushed and twisted, lay partly on the roof of the elevator carriage, and the head and shoulders were jammed between the carriage and the first floor. Moulton send word to the police station in South Fulton street and Capt Arthur Cary went to the Willow Court apartments with two detectives. Five minutes study showed them what had happened.

When Benton dropped the carriage to the basement he did not bring the floor of it to a level with the basement floor. The carriage had stopped when it was three feet from the basement level. Then the boy jumped out and ran to speak to his mother. Then the telephone call buzzed and he ran to the elevator. Putting his head inside the carriage, he reached for the control wheel to bring the lift down to the floor. He had started it too quickly. The carriage came down on a run. The inside of the carriage roof struck the back of the boy's head a terrific blow, crushing the skull, flinging the body upward and forward in a half circle and throwing it partly on the carriage roof. He was killed instantly before he had time to scream.

FOREST FIRES ARE CHECKED

Light Rain Stops Spread of Flames in North Michigan.

Calumet, Mich., July 25.—Rain, light but continuous, fell in northern Michigan, effectually checking further devastation from forest fires for the present.

The Mohawk Mining company's stamp mill at Traverse Bay, was seriously threatened. Supervisor Smith, of Mohawk, telephoned President Petermann, of Calumet. The latter went to the scene and engaged men to fight the flames.

Fair, but Stormy.

A gentleman boarded the Karori car at Kelburne avenue. Recognizing a friend on one of the seats, he nodded pleasantly and then said, "Well, what do you think of the weather?"

"Oh, horrible!" was the reply.

"And how is your wife today?"

"She's just about the same, thank you!"—New Zealand Free Lance.

ITALIANS TOWNS RAZED

Milan, Como, Saronno and Erba Reported Entirely Wrecked.

Sixty Men Lose Lives in Wreckage of Northern Railway Shops at Saronno—Six Bodies Found.

Rome, July 25.—A disastrous hurricane has swept over northern Italy. Dispatches from Milan, Como, Saronno, and Erba report extensive havoc.

The latest reports, which, it is hoped are exaggerated, state that Saronno, Lonate, and Revellasca, three industrial towns with an aggregate population of 20,000, have been destroyed.

It is known that many buildings at Saronno were leveled to the ground, including workshops of the Northern railway. Sixty workmen were buried in the ruins. Six bodies have been recovered. Relief parties have been dispatched.

TAFT SAILS FOR ROCKLAND

President's Injured Ankle Improves and Is Now Less Painful.

Bar Harbor, Me., July 25.—President Taft is at sea once more. His injured right ankle is better and less painful and by the time he is ready to go ashore at Rockland on Tuesday, he is expected to be free from pain. His surgeon, Dr. Grayson of the Mayflower, thinks the pain will be entirely gone by that time. The ankle was put in a compress and the swelling has almost entirely disappeared.

Most of the members of the Mayflower party went to church with Mr. Taft. The Rev. R. B. Matthews preached. Senator Hale took the president and the others out to his summer home at Nicolin, where dinner was served. A special train brought the party to the Mt. Desert ferry, where they boarded the yacht. She steamed out from Bar Harbor and to the gray sea.

Why Not Pass the Plate?

They ought to pass the plate at church weddings. It comes natural to do it in church, and to do so would add a pretty and useful employment to the duties of the ushers, who always have a little spare time before the bride arrives. And, really, getting married is more expensive than ever, and, though wedding presents are excellent in their way, what the young people usually need the most is cash. Instead of the list of gifts which the newspapers sometimes print we should read, "The collection yielded $4,000,000." That would be nice. It is much easier to store and care for money than plate and glass! And money always fits and there is no such thing as an embarrassing duplication of dollars.—Life.

OHIO REPUBLICANS MEET ON TUESDAY

Fight for Nomination for Governor Will Be Hot One.

JUDGE BROWN AGAINST FIELD

Senator Burton Is Said to Be Desirious of Stepping Into Position of State Leader—Longworth Temporary Chairman.

Columbus, O., July 25.—The Republicans have begun turning up for their state convention, the first session of which is to be held in this city on Tuesday. On only one point was there anything like animity of sentiment in the throngs of Republicans and this was—everything must be done to save the president's own state next fall.

Most Republicans here admit the Democrats nominated an exceedingly strong ticket at Dayton, and that the slightest mistake might lead to the re-election of Gov. Judson Harmon.

Senators Burton and Dick and their friends have discussed the situation as to candidates for governor and while George B. Cox and his friends continue to assert that Oren Britt Brown, judge of the court of common pleas at Dayton, is surely to be nominated, the present situation is that it is Brown against the field, and a strong field at that, consisting of Warren G. Harding, James R. Garfield, Carmi Thompson, Greenville W. Mooney and Representative Nicholas Longworth, Roosevelt's son-in-law.

Harding is editor of the Marion Star and a brilliant speaker, an old-time friend of Joseph Benson Foraker, and one of the first of Foraker's lieutenants to desert him when Roosevelt began his assaults upon Foraker. Harding and Foraker have since become reunited. Foraker is not to attend the convention.

The process of elimination and induction has begun. Cox claimed 450 delegates for Brown of the 1,066 in the convention. The field insisted that Cox was off on his reckoning.

If Senator Burton and Senator Dick received any encouragement whatever from President Taft on their visit to Beverly, it was to see to it that neither Brown nor Garfield was nominated for governor. Brown is an old-time follower of Cox and Cox, it is insisted by those experienced in Ohio politics, is reaching out for control of the state organization. Cox, for a decade, has been the absolute dictator of Cincinnati. Since the retirement of Foraker the state has been without a leader and there are astute ones here who say they are perfectly satisfied that Senator Burton himself desires to be state leader and that the developments of the next two days will surely portray this.

In the effort to eliminate Judge Brown it was pointed out that in this progressive period no old-time boss like Brown and no dictatorial boss like Cox can be recognized and that Brown as a candidate against Gov. Harmon would be beaten.

Coming along to Mr. Longworth his friends declare that under no conditions was he a candidate for governor. The story is that Longworth, who gets his nominatoins for congress by the favor of Mr. Cox of Cincinnati, informed Mr. Cox as early as last March that he was not and would not be a candidate for governor; that he desired to remain in congress which was his best field of action. Therefore Longworth was selected as temporary chairman of the convention.

The Republicans in the convention are to follow the example of the Democrats at Dayton and are not to mention in the platform the United States senatorship succession, nor the liquor question. Finally if indicatoins are of value, this Republican convention is to be of the tarantula order—bite and fight from start to finish.

MOORE FAMILY REUNION.

The following poem, written for the occasion by Mrs. Moore, is printed by the request of Mrs Tilly Hanley at whose home the reunion was held.

I can scarcely make it seem
That thirteen years have passed away
Since we welcomed you the first time
The same as we have to-day.

Our hillside then, as now,
Was full of loving greetings
Of Uncle, Aunts and Cousins,
All rejoicing in these meetings

Where we all take solid comfort
In the genial summer time,
When the World is full of beauty
And the atmosphere sublime.

For nearly every reunion day
That we have come together,
Providence has favored us
With perfect summer weather.

And so we annually meet again,
From one home to another,
Every year we grow more dear
And learn to love each other.

Which was the wish expressed
The first time that we met,
By Beloved Uncle Jacob,
How can we e're forget.

No, not all are here to greet us,
As warmly as of yore,
For death has claimed a portion
Of dear ones gone before.

And out of the goodly number
That met with us that day,
If memory serves me right,
Just twelve have passed away.

The eldest of the Company,
Dear Aunt, beloved by all,
Was summoned to that better land
And went the following fall.

She was the Historian of the day
And proved her mind was clear,
By the genealogy given of Andrew Moore,
And she in her eightieth year.

HANNAH H. MOORE.

Time passed on and soon death came
To summon yet another,
Who breathed her last in the loving arms
Of her dear devoted Mother.

LIZZIE M. DERBYSHIRE

Our Mary next was called away,
And left her precious little ones,
To struggle on without her help
Until Life's work is done.

MARY H. MOORE

Dear Mary, and Lizzie, in Heaven,
I hope you will always guide
The steps of your sweet little children
And their sorrowing parents beside.

T'was meet that in the Springtime,
When the year was young and gay,
Death came to pluck a blossom
And bear it far away.

To live among the Angels
In a better World than this,
Where suffering is never known,
In a land of perfect bliss.

BERNICE JEWELL

Dear Uncle Jacob followed
Years after Aunt had left us.
For which we all were thankful
That we could have him with us.

And when we come together
And the yearly program make up
We always miss the presence
Of our beloved Uncle Jacob.

JACOB MOORE

The sixth was stricken down in Death,
With that dread malady.
Pneumonia, that takes one unawares
And hastens them away.

He was the last one in the Crowd
Of all the Cousins here.
That one would dream could bid adieu
To all that Life holds dear.

EDWIN FARRINGTON

Later in the following season
The summons came once more,
To a cheerful, helpful sister
Whose life work here was o'er.

ANGELINE DARLING

And from the crowd another form
Was called by Death away,
And laid to rest beneath the sod
On a lovely summer day.

In a quiet Country grave yard,
Among the birds and flowers,
Beside the little Webster Church,
Where he spent many happy hours,

WOOSTER BLODGET

I must still mention another friend,
Who in the G. A. R. risked his life,
And weathered through the prison-fare
To be here with his Worthy Wife.

Now Death at last has claimed him,
His work on Earth is o'er,
His boat has crossed the river
And landed on the Golden Shore.

HORACE DANFARTH

Death came again one Summer day,
And gently wo'ed and won,
The heart and life of a sweet young girl
And took her to his Home.

Leaving her many friends to mourn
The loss of one they loved,
Whose place can ne'er be filled on Earth
Till they meet in Heaven above.

SARAH PESTER

Another friend from Childhood
Has latest passed away,
Who with her husband helped to make
A successful reunion day.

"One more to welcome us when we shall cross
The space between this land and that one over there,
One more to make the dear beyond more fair."

HULDAH ANN BALLARD

And now I see beside me
The dear form of another,
Who tenderly loved and cherished
The memory of his Mother.

Oh: Son of Mine; The Silent Gate
Has turned on its hinge for thee,
And into the Valley no one knows
Thy proud head passed from me.

The Book is closed on the long account
On pages clear and fair,
And some whose blots and errors hid
The high hopes written there.

Oh: Son of Ours, In those far years
Where in me knew thee best
Were born the lofty purposes
That hallowed all the rest.

And though like seeds in barren soil,
They seeming bear no fruit,
Who knows but God transplanted them
His own design to suit.

Her Diamond Necklace.

Brown is a very careful man. He is superlatively careful. So careful is he that he has insured his insurance money.

Now, Brown has a wife. Wives have to be given birthday presents, and on his wife's first birthday after their marriage he gave her a beautiful diamond necklace. This was not as reckless as you might think, for each stone on the necklace represented a year of Mrs. Brown's life, and he set every one know that. And he arranged to give Mrs. Brown a new diamond each birthday. And he let the neighbors know that too.

He has just missed giving his wife a birthday present for the ninth successive year.

The Salt Charm Failed.

Some three years before the Franco-German war broke out Count Seckendorff accompanied King William I. on his visit to Napoleon III. and was present at the celebrated dejeuner given in the Pavilion de Diane at Fontainebleau. King William, who was sitting next the empress, was asked by her to pass the salt, and in complying with this request he threw a little salt over his shoulder. Upon the empress exclaiming, "Why do you do that?" the king explained that in his country it was the custom to do so when passing the salt to ward off bad luck and any chance of a quarrel. The empress in a prettily turned speech at once replied, "But surely there is no danger of anything interfering with our friendship." In less than three years the Germans had crossed the Rhine.—London Spectator.

OBITUARIES.

MICHAEL SMELTZER.

Michael Smeltzer was born February 5, 1838: died July 21, 1910.

This is the record that meets our eyes, but the thought that is uppermost in our minds is that our friend has passed away, nevermore to return.

Everyone whose good fortune it was to know him could only esteem him more and more as the years passed on. On his church relations he was quiet and unassuming, ever faithful in attendance and always ready with his counsel and his means to advance its interest. The M. E. church of Tecumseh has lost a faithful friend.

The Masonic lodge, of which he was a member, feel that they have lost a brother who was thoroughly imbued with the pure principles of the order and in his daily life suffered no reproach to rest upon his character.

As a citizen he was just and upright and in his family he is all that was loving and kind and many there are in the lowly walks of life who attest to his kindness in word and deed. The vast concourse of people who followed him to his last resting place in beautiful Brookside gave testimony to the love and respect in which he was held.

To the dear ones who are left to mourn the loss of a faithful husband, a loving father and a cherished friend we would say

"He who beholds thy sadness
Hast to the trusting heart assurance spoken of that blest land,
Where, free from care and pain,
Fond friends unite again."

DR. GEORGE FERGSUON.

We have to chronicle the death of a former resident and business man of Tecumseh who died in Coldwater Thursday, July 21. He had been in failing health for nearly four months but the immediate cause of his death was a severe attack of pneumonia. He was 83 years, 5 months and 20 days old at the time of his death. Many of the older people will remember him, when he was a druggist here. He was a member of the Baptist church and a friend to all who knew him. His wife and two sons survive him.

Miss Sarah Harriott, an old lady living alone in Macon, was found dead in bed by Mrs. Belle Mills who lives next door, on Monday morning. Mistrusting that something might be wrong, she looked in the bedroom window and saw her lying across the bed. She broke in the screen and discovered that life was extinct. The deceased was over 80 years of age and despite the fact that her many neices and nephews had urged her to live with them she preferred to live alone.

Lenawee County Crops.

Farmers are busy with their harvest at present. Haying is practically finished: the clover crop is good, the dry weather did not seem to effect it: timothy will be only a half crop, the rains coming too late to help. But the promise of the wheat crop is great and it is believed the week will witness one of the wheat harvests in the history of Lenawee Co. The fears of last winter that the crops would be ruined by the snow and ice were groundless. Corn is doing finely where the ground is properly cared for and the timely rains have been a blessing. Potatoes have suffered from the hot weather but the late ones may prove all right.

A notable contribution to the fiction of the month will be found in the first part of a serial story by Edith Wharton entitled "The Letters." There are four lively short stories, as well as an installment of May Sinclair's serial "The Creators: A Comedy."

For those who are watching with interest the evolution of the church in its relation to human affairs, and who have noted what many believe to be the signs of an impending change in the nation's religious life, the Rev. Washington Gladhen's paper on "The Municipal Church," in the August CENTURY, will be rich in suggestiveness.

Chautauqua

Chautauqua week is over and gone and we are left to count up the many good things that were given us. The many lessons we have learned, the many memories we have stored away for future reference.

Who that heard, but was inspired by the fine music, the sweet singing the range in subjects of the many lectures was quite wonderful, and altogether the Chautauqua has been a source of pleasure and profit to all and we hope another year may bring us another just as good.

And we feel that the success of it is due to Geo. A. Rathbun the local manager and to Dr. Hartzog, through whose united efforts it was brought about. Few people understand the amount of labor that is required to make a success of such a movement the many obstacles to contend with, and to rouse the enthusiasm of the people but we feel that they have done nobly and deserve the thanks of each and every citizen of Tecumseh.

Class Picnic

About 20 young people, known as the Gleaners of the Baptist Sunday School with their teacher Miss Iva VanValkenburg held their annual class picnic in Haydens Grove Saturday afternoon. A fine picnic supper was served and all report a most enjoyable time.

The August issue of the WOMAN'S HOME COMPANION is called "The Good Time Number," and it lives up to that title in every particular, giving ideas for summer enjoyment of every sort. The fiction is of the light happy variety with, in most instances, the atmospere of vacation days charmingly depicted. "Mlle. Mystic," a midsummer comedy by Anna Steese Richardson, will doubtless be acted in many gardens during the summer, and a remarkaqly timely article on the Outdoor Play, by Walter Prichard Eaton, will help in a large measure to make al fresco theatricals the popular thing during the summer.

Working It Out.

The following note was delivered to a schoolmistress recently:

"Dear Mum—I am sorry that Johnny won't be able to come to school today. He has gone with his father to act as timekeeper. The sum you gave Johnny last night was, 'If the road is one and a quarter miles long how long will it take a man to walk that distance twenty-six and a half times, his average rate of progress being three and three-quarter miles per hour?' Johnny ain't a man yet, so as dad's the only man in this house he had to go. They started at 4 o'clock this morning, and dad said he'd finish the sum in one day if he could manage it, though it would mean hard going. Dear mum, next time you want any information please make it 'woman,' then I can do the sum and dad can go to his work."—London Scraps.

A Custom of the Balkans.

He or she who enters a house for the first time is supposed in the Balkan countries to bring it good or bad luck for the whole twelvemonth. This belief gives rise to a curious observance. The visitor before crossing the threshold picks up a stone (token of strength) or a green twig (emblem of health and fruitfulness) and lays it on the hearth. He also brings with him some grains of salt, which he casts into the flames, and then, squatting by the fireside, wishes his hosts "a prosperous year, a plentiful crop and many blessings." Then as the grains of salt burst and crackle in the fire he utters the following quaint formula: "As I am sitting, even so may sit the hen and warm the eggs. As this salt splits, even so may split the eggs of the clucking hen and the chickens come forth."

LETTER FROM W. P. STOOKING

Editor of the Herald:

Since writing my last letter I have read with much interest the two articles on "Chicago Street Up-to-date." Reading them convinces me that was I to visit my old home I would be like a stranger in a strange land; so many of the old familiar [illegible] so many old familiar buildings replaced with more modern and substantial structures. About the only thing about the old home would be the cars passing through the heart of the town and stopping at the crossing on Chicago street to let off and take on passengers and mail; the old Presbyterian church, the Episcopal church, the Union school building, the Globe mill and the depot. Of course I would recognize the old East and West and Brownville birch school houses if they are yet standing. If the house in which I was born 70 years ago is still standing I should recognize that notwithstanding its changed surroundings.

In my last letter we were westward bound up the north side of Chicago street. Stopped at the little doggery, not for a drink but to allow those who were with me in our ramble a rest while I came back to our California home to resume the duties of a landlord who with his wife has six cottages and grounds to keep in order and keep rented, a business requiring an inexhaustable store of patience and a pretty thorough knowledge of human nature so as to be able to judge by appearances whether the applicants will make desirable tenants or not, for we have all classes of men, women and children to deal with. The latter often prove "thorns in the flesh" to the landlord and lady.

Well, here I am on my ninth page and we are still at the doggery. Proceeding west from there the next building which comes to my mind is the two-story Orsborn bricks. Of this block I remember three things, a store in the east end kept, I think, by John Orsborn. One afternoon two of three of we boys were in there and in the show case we saw a box of crochet needles with the name on the box and we had a little discussion as to the proper pronunciation of the word and finally called on the merchant to settle the matter for us.

In the west end at one time was a sort of a bakery where two, three or four of we boys would go of an evening, buy a pie, sit at a little side table and eat it. When I was twelve or thirteen years old there was in Tecumseh a boy's temperance organization called the Cadets of Temperance to which I belonged and our meeting place was in a room on the second floor of this building. I have not a distinct remembrance of this organization but I remember that there was such an organization for boys and young men over twelve years and under twenty years of age. There was also a Sons of Temperance for men and a Daughters of Temperance order. Father was a member of the former and I think sisters Sarah and Fannie belonged to the latter order. I wonder if there is any one living in Tecumseh who remembers anything about those orders.

Next west was the Tribou home and next, and last to be mentioned in this letter, was the fine home of B. J. Bidewll which was considered one of the finest in the city in those days. It would seem strange to go back there and find it turned into a hotel. To me it seems almost a sacrilege to throw open to the careless, thoughtless and often heartless public a place which had once been the home of loving hearts in and around which must have clustered many associations which were sacred to them and for which that home must have been the dearest spot on earth to them, as every home should be to those who built it up and who have reared sons and daughters and given them to the service of mankind. I remember the Bidwell home to be one of culture, refinement and hospitality.

The August CENTURY has a number of notable art features, prominent among which is the sixth paper by Robert Hichens on the Holy Land, in which is described, with characteristic vividness, the author's first impressions of Jerusalem. The article contains two remarkable color drawings by Jules Guerin, besides illustrations from photographs. There is also an exquisite colored frontispiece painted for The CENTURY by Maxfield Parrish and illustrating Florence Wilkinson's poem in this number, "Seven Green Pools at Cintra."

FIRE HORSES EASY TO TRAIN

System That Will Turn an Average Horse into a Fire Veteran in a Day—Tricks the Fire Horses Learn For Themselves.

A man who didn't know very much about the mode of training Fire Department horses stood in front of a fire house the other day just as an alarm came in. He saw the big horses jump from their stalls the moment the gong sounded and take their places beneath the harness. He saw the collars fastened in less time than it takes to tell and noted by the watch he held that the five ton truck was leaving the house within nine seconds after the alarm came in.

"the fire horse," he said to a Fire Department official standing at his side. "It must be a big job to get the right sort of horse in the first place, and a still more difficult task to train him."

"Do you see that old horse hauling the crosstown street car by the door?" replied the official. "I can take [illegible] horse or any [illegible] me, if he is not vicious, and make a well trained fire horse out of him in a few hours. The system by which we take a green horse and make a veteran out of him is so simple that I have always wished that we could make a good fireman as easily as we can drill a fire horse.

"In the first place, the rules of the department require that a green horse must be between 5 and 8 years old. He must be sound and not vicious.

"The horse comes to the door of the fire house absolutely green. He is even worse than the new fourth grade fireman, for the fireman has been through a course of sprouts at the school of instruction and knows a little about what is expected of him.

"As the green horse looks inside the door he sees the gleaming brass and shining nickel on the fire apparatus, and directly in front of his eyes the harness is suspended over the pole of the truck or engine. The horse looks around the interior and sees many other things that are new and strange, and it is no wonder that he stands in the door trembling.

"This moment is critical. The driver who knows his business lets the horse stand in the door until he has found that none of the strange things has made a move to molest him, and then he is coaxed gently inside a stall.

"Then the driver leaves him for a few minutes and lets him stand until he learns that nothing is going to harm him. When the driver sees the animal's ears resume their normal appearance he knows that he can go on with the training.

"Then the real training begins. The horse is bridled and the driver leads him by the bit out to his place underneath the harness and the collar is fastened around his neck. This process is tried a few times until the horse goes out without hanging back in the least.

"Now a lead line about four feet long is fastened around his neck and as the chain across the front of his stall drops the driver steps toward the horse's place under the harness, and the animal now goes willingly. He is led out by this strap maybe forty or fifty times until he begins to learn what is expected of him.

"Up to this time the gong hasn't been rung, and now the driver sets out to make him understand that when the gong rings he is expected to move. A man is posted at each side of the stall and one at every other avenue of escape. The driver gets behind him with a whip and when the gong rings and the stall chain drops he gives the horse a cut over the flank with the whip.

"This is so unexpected that the animal gives a snort and jumps forward. He looks both ways, but there is a man on guard who raises his hand. The horse sees that there is no place he can go except right under the harness where he has been led all the time. He goes there and the man in front clamps the collar around his neckneck before he can make another move.

"It may be necessary to persuade the horse to move by means of the whip across the flank a few times, but inside of a day any green horse can be thoroughly trained so that the next morning at the stroke of the gong he will take his place as promptly as a veteran. This one day's training increases the value of the horse just about $100. The city buys most of the Fire Department horses at $250 each.

"The average life of the fire horse is only about ten years. It is a sad commentary on the manner in which the city treats the fire horse that at the end of the time he is almost a wreck, good for nothing but pulling a street car or junk wagon. I think the time has come when some humane Mayor will decide that it will pay to have a far mto which all the horses owned by the city can be sent for a vacation, such as the other members of the fire, police, street cleaning and various other city departments get.

"The number of horses killed in the service every year is amazing. You know there is a rule that if an accident is unavoidable the Fire Department must take the brunt of it. That's why the drivers send so many horses into elevated pillars and all manner of obstructions in an effort to prevent damage to some other vehicle or to a person who gets in the way of the apparatus."—New York Sun

Mrs. Hilda Inowye, a wealthy and cultured Japanese woman, is completing a course in domestic science at teachers' college, Columbia University, in order that she may teach her country women the fine points of house keeping as practiced in America, England and Germany. From teachers' college Mrs. Inowye will go to the University of Chicago, where she will spend some months. She has already taken a brief peep into the University of Michigan. Later she will go to England, and thence to Germany.

There are 500 inhabitants on the Tonawanda Indian reservation in Western New York. Though divided by clearly defined party lines into Christians and pagans they retain in common many of their ancestors' primitive customs, a very conspicuous custom being the annual corn drying.

Cornstarch, so much used in America for food, is not in demand in China, as the natives use for similar purposes the water in which they have boiled their rice—congee water. This liquid when cold sets into a thick, viscous and transparent jelly, which is colored, sweetened and eaten as Americans eat blancmange.

BLUE RIBBON RACES

Held in Detroit August 1-5.

Recent miles on the part of trotters and pacers being prepared for their engagements in the grand circuit indicate that extreme speed will prevail in all of the races during Detroit's famous blue ribbon meeting, August 1 to 5. The Chamber of Commerce and Merchants' & the Manufactures' stakes will have to be sensatianal to a degree to furnish better sport this year than the purse events.

One of the races for developed trotters promises to make turf history. This is the 2:07 trot on August 2, in which The Harvester and Bob Douglas meet Spanish Queen. Two years ago this splendid mare won the M. & M. and clever as she then was, she is better and faster to day. Recently she trotted a mile in 2:05 on the Detroit track, one of the quarters at the rate of 1:56, so that she is fit and ready to fight it out with either of the aspirants for the stallion crown

The three-year-olds that start in the $15,000 furturities on August 1 are reported to be in excellent shape and a wonderful race is expected, because of the inducement. This is the first futurity given by the Detroit Driving Club, and serves to round off the blue ribbon meeting and make it complete in every detail.

The free-for-all pace on Thursday, August 4, will introduce that wonderful gray horse, The Eel, and, fast as he is he will have to be at his very best to beat such race horses as Alleen Wilson, Darkey Hal, George Gano and Ross K.

Such events, with the unusual fields that will score in the M. & M. and Chamber of Commerce, cannot fail to keep the blue ribbon to the forefront of all meetings. Michigan people are lucky when they can see such racing within the confines of their state, and in a city where a week is as delightful as it always is in Detroit.

Grain Drills

Last week we talked about plowing. Next comes the sowing of wheat. More care should be taken in using an up-to-date grain drill. We recommend the FARMER'S FAVORITE and SUPERIOR. These two drills have stood the test of years as far as accuracy and durability are concerned. We can furnish them in either hoe, disc, plain or fert

Please remember this. The demand is greater than the supply and those who wait too long are not going to be able to secure a drill this fall. Samples are now ready for inspection.

As in former years, we will sell the HOMESTEAD brands and if you want results, do as so many others are doing, come to us and tell us your soils and we will guarantee to sell you a brand for your particular soil that will be a winner.

Dust Dust Dust

A PROBLEM THAT CONFRONTS US—HOW TO BECOME DUSTLESS.

The problem confronts us as to the best and cheapest way to accomplish this desired result to have dustless roads.

The automobile travel which grinds each atom to the finest powder, has made more dust which we must fight. Dust is wear, if we have no dust there will be no wear on our roads. Dust brings disease if we have no dust there must be a close or approach to perfect sanitation. In our town district the tax is from 25c to 75c per week or from $12. to $15. per season for sprinkling our streets and for private residences the price is $3. for the season for a 4x8 lot and more in proportion and then you do your own sprinkling and the dust is laid for a short time at morning and evening.

Many may not be aware of the fact that several of our citizens are experimenting with some of the prepartions on the market.

Mr. Will Fisher is using crude oil in front of his home, and Mr. Abner Wilson for 16 rods in front of his house is using Solvays granulated Calcuim Chloride at a cost of one cent per pound, using on his 16 rods about 500 pounds.

In Clinton last year they used the Staudard Cresent road oil, on one of their streets with good results 4 bbls. being sufficient for an ordinary block at an expense of .046 per gal. they are using it again this year, this is claimed to be 60 per cent cement.

The oil used so extensively in Calif is a heavy preparation and makes it more like a macadamised road. We shall watch with interest the work going on and think it a subject the town should investigate.

A DISCUSSION.

To the Herald:-

I have heard considerable discussion as to the pronunciation, of the German "W" by Americans.

Although I have spoken German since I was six years old, and have been many times in Germany since, had a German mother who was Principal of a Ladies School. and pass for a German in Germany, yet I thought that possibly there might be some section, where the German "W" was pronounced as an English "V", for in England also the pronunciation varies in different districts. I therefore wrote to both the German and Austrian Consulates in Chicago, which two countries cover all the German speaking races, asking:

"Is there any place in Germany or Austria, where the German "W" is pronounced like an Eng lish "V"

I have just received the following replies:

"Imperial German Consulate, Chicago July 18th., 1910.

"I know of no place in Germany, where W is pronounced like the English V.

The Imperial acting Consul.
signed Bunf."

Austro Hungarian Consulate General, Chicago, Ill., July 10, 1910.

This office knows of no place in Austria, where the letter W is pronounced like an English V.

The Imperial and Royal Consul,
Signed: J. Corstre."

As many grammers, not all, give the pronunciation of the German W like that of the English V, may be because the Amerian ear catches the sound of the German W with difficulty as it is not as liquid as the English W, and it is therefore easier to teach it as a straight V. Pronouncing it in that manner, however, would stamp one immediately as a foreigner in Germany. JENNY LAW HARDY.

How a Platform is Built.

Building a platform at a political convention reminds one of the side show of a circus. While owing its existence to the main show it is separate and distinct from it, and you have to pay a separate price of admission. A good many folks who came to this convention had a chance to take in this side show, because it was held in the parlor of the biggest hotel and was of easy access for the crowds.

There were several acts to the platform play, each act consuming almost an entire day.

In the first act a procession of strange looking men appeared, each bearing a plank, tapped on the door and were admitted singly. They left their planks all tagged and came out again.

The next act is invisible to the audience. A low rumbling is heard at times from the stage and occasionally there is a loud noise as a heavy plank falls. The audience thrills as it grasps the momentous importance of these sounds and what they mean. Some of the men who carried their own planks into the room now stand around and speculate as to whose plank it was that fell and strain their ears for some sound that will reassure them. It is like a scene on a stage, a la Belasco.

The third act is the longest act of all. The low rumble has now become a roar. All of the cast is now engaged. Some of the men who took planks into the room are taken in for the torture of seeing these planks, born amid so much travail, planed and chiselled and sawed up in their sight until little is left, or else broken up for kindling wood.

There is a sudden call for typewriters, and a battery of them dashes up. Men appear in an anteroom, place something in one of these machines and stand around while the machine grinds out a brand new plank made of the remnants of several old ones. Amid increasing excitement these planks are all placed in a pile. Then comes the supreme moment. A committee of expert carpenters with skilled hands comes out of the main temple, approach this pile reverently, examine the marks on the different planks and begin building the platform. They must work quickly, for the hour is late. Some of the less expert carpenters stand about and watch the structure as it assumes shape, now and then looking at their watches. At last it is finished, picked up and borne into the inner temple. There is a moment of breathless excitement. Then the doors of this temple swing open, the high priests walk out slowly as befits their station. The platform has been accepted. The nation has been saved.—New York Sun.

Free Sample Aids Old Men

The sudden change from years of activity of both body and mind to the quiet of later years causes the human system to undergo many changes, chief of which is in the digestive organs.

It becomes harder and harder to get the bowels to move promptly and regularly and in consequence many elderly men suffer not only from the basic trouble, constipation, but from indigestion, headache, belching, sour stomach, drowsiness after eating and similar annoyances. It is first of all necessary to keep the bowels open and then to tone the digestive muscles so as to get them to again do their work naturally. A violent cathartic or purgative is not only unnecessary but harmful, and something mild will do the work just as well.

After you have got through experimenting with salts and pills and waters of various kinds, and have become convinced that they do only temporary good at best, then try Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, a mild, gentle, pleasant-tasting laxative tonic that is especially adapted to the requirements of old people, women and children, and yet is effective enough for anybody. Your druggist, who has handled it successfully for a quarter of a century, will sell you a bottle for fifty cents or one dollar, but if you want to make a test of it before spending any money send your name and address to Dr. Caldwell and he will gladly send you a sample bottle free of charge.

This remedy is rapidly displacing all other forms of medication for the cure of stomach, liver and bowel trouble, and families like Mr. O. F. Wisher's of Sycamore, Ill., and Mrs. Carrie Culler's of 325 N. Notre Dame street, South Bend, Ind., are now never without it in the house. They have tested it and know its grand value to every member of the family.

Dr. Caldwell personally will be pleased to give you any medical advice you may desire for yourself or family pertaining to the stomach, liver or bowels absolutely free of charge. Explain your case in a letter and he will reply to you in detail. For the free sample simply send your name and address on a postal card or otherwise. For either request the doctor's address is Dr. W. B. Caldwell, R.509 Caldwell building, Monticello, Ill.

Puzzled the Packer.

The first organized work of women in a relief corps was led by Florence Nightingale in the Crimean war of 1855. So unaccustomed were people to that service at the time that it called out some curious comment. Writing of "Chinese" Gordon, Dr. Butler tells in his book, "Ten Great and Good Men," how the boys at Cambridge met the call upon them for hospital stores.

One day a letter came suddenly from the war office telling us that any warm clothes for the invalids at Scutari would be prized by Miss Florence Nightingale. At once in every college a committee was extemporized of leading undergraduates, charged to collect presents of flannel jackets, trousers, "blazers," rugs, greatcoats, furs, even sealskins.

In a few hours box after box was filled with these treasures, and all the boxes were kindly and gratuitously packed for us by the leading upholsterer of the town, his foreman simply remarking to me in a tone which General Gordon would have enjoyed:

"A nice consignment for a lady, sir."

Cause of Twilight.

Twilight is a phenomenon caused by atmospheric refraction. When the sun gets below the horizon we are not immediately plunged into the darkness of night. Although the sun is below our horizon, rays of solar light are bent or refracted by the terrestrial atmosphere and continue to furnish some slight illumination. The process continues with diminishing intensity until the sun is so far below the horizon that the refracting power of the atmosphere is no longer able to bend the rays enough to produce a visible effect. The time after sunset that the sun reaches such a position varies with the latitude of the place. There is less twilight at the tropic zone than at the temperate or frigid zone. This is due to less time taken by the sun's rays to pass through the atmosphere, at the tropic zone the sun's rays being perpendicular and at the temperate and frigid zones oblique.—New York American.

The Story of American Shoes.

The story of leather in the United States is largely a history of invention and improvement in shoe-making machinery.

Starting with the stitching-machine of Colonel McKay (who was, it should be said, more of an exploiter than an inventor), in rapid succession there were put on the market machines for welting, pegging,—indeed, more than a score for performing all those complicated operations by which the modern ready-made shoe is built up. Ever since the days of McKay there has prevailed a peculiar system among shoe machine manufacturers of renting but never selling their apparatus. To this day the shoemaker does not buy the machines to do his work; he rents them for a term of years, paying a royalty on each shoe made,—about three cents on a pair of woman's shoes and from four to five cents on a pair of man's. When the United Shoe Machinery Company was formed by a combination in 1899 this method was perpetuated.

Although New England has the honor of being the first seat of the shoe industry, and though it may still be said to hold its primacy in the number of shoes manufactured, New York and Pennsylvania early in their history acquired a pre-eminence in the tanning end of the leather business and also in the purely mercantile phases. It was, moreover, as is pointed out in another place, from central New York that the American glove business started. The leather merchants of New York have always stood high in the community, and for many years in their close association in that district in New York city which was and still is familiarly known as "the Swamp" there was perhaps a touch of clannishness which is more characteristic of the trade guilds of the Old World than of American business life.—American Review of Reviews.

Aerial Smuggling.

The crossing from France to England in an air craft, while at present remarkable and unusual, presages the day when such flights will cease to cause newspaper mention. As the machines require no light visible from below and can travel in the dark, their development would seem to provide unusual facilities for the smuggler. Articles of size and weight would not be available, but the small and costly things, such as diamonds and other jewels, and certain drugs, etc., offer a cargo of great value which can be carried in hand satchels.—Popular Mechanics.

"It's really provoking," said the fond mother. "Baby always cries when we have company."

"Well," answered Mr. Groucher, "you can't blame children for disliking company. If it weren't for visitors they wouldn't have to recite or play pieces on the piano."

ONE CERTAINTY.

Some Tecumseh People Fully Realize It Now

When the back aches from kidney ills.
When urinary troubles annoy you,
There's a certain way to find relief;
A sure way to be cured.
Doan's Kidney Pills will do it.

Tecumseh people endorse this claim.

Mrs. Jeanett Teachout, N. Oneida street, Tecumseh, Mich., says: "I again take pleasure in recommending Doan's Kidney Pills to persons afflicted with kidney trouble. Last fall my kidneys became disordered and I suffered from pains in the small of my back. If I stooped sharp twinges seized me and for a few seconds I was unable to straighten. Too frequent passages of kidney secretions also annoyed me greatly and the doctor was unable to help me. Doan's Kidney Pills were so highly spoken of that I procured a box and began their use. I was so promptly relieved that I continued taking the remedy until my trouble had disappeared."

Party's Fate on One Vote.

Instances are common enough in elections when a single vote turns the scale, but for that vote to decide not only the fate of a candidate, but of a party as well, is rare. Yet a majority of one in parliament, which may logically depend on a majority of one in the country, has worked some of the most momentous results possible. The classical example is the act of union of 1799, certainly among the largest, most important and most remarkable changes ever accomplished by a legislative body. One hundred and six voted for it and 105 against. Then a majority of one carried the great reform bill in 1832.

Majorities only a little bigger have again and again been responsible for farreaching consequences. A majority of five threw out the Melbourne government in 1839. By the same figure Lord John Russell's government was defeated in 1866. Gladstone went out of office in 1873 because he lacked three votes, and the public education act, one of the most important ever passed, was placed on the statute book by a majority of two.—London Chronicle.

The Talkative Barber.

"The talkativeness of barbers long has been the subject for puns and jokes," said a barber. "I had always fancied the matter one of recent origin until the other day. You know in my profession we have a great deal of spare time. Well, the other day I was sitting on the bench waiting for the shaves and hair cuts to come in and to while away the time was glancing through a copy of Plutarch's 'Archelaus.' Imagine my consternation when I happened on a line reading:

"'A prating barber asked Archelaus how he would be trimmed. He answered, "In silence."'

"Well, that got me. I never knew they even had barbers that long ago. I always supposed the ancients let their whiskers grow and that they wore curly locks as long as their togas, but it seems that the barber is an ancient relic and that his talking proclivities are a matter of history. I'll have to give it to the humorists there.

"But, say," he whispered, "that manicure girl over there has got us beat to a frazzle. I wonder if there's anything in Plutarch about her."—Kansas City Star.

The Sunny Side of Superstition.

That there is anything genial, cheering or therapeutically eligible about superstition may seem a tall statement. The adjective generally associated with it is "dark." On the contrary, there is something very brightening about a four leaf clover. Who is not a little more of an optimist for picking up a horseshoe? What lonely farmer's wife, stormbound on a winter afternoon, with unwelcome leisure on her hands, but feels a little quickening of the pulse as she drops her scissors and beholds them sticking up in the carpet or discovers that she has laid an extra place at the table? Company signs are the commonest and welcomed of all superstitions. The scissors, the needle, the dishcloth, the fork, the Saturday sneeze, all inculcate hospitality and reward it by an unexpected visitor. If the needle slants as it stands up in the crack of the floor it foretells a gentleman. Run, young daughters of the house, and put a blue bow in your hair!—Atlantic Monthly.

When You "See Stars."

The man who when struck violently on the head says he "saw stars" is not far from telling the truth. The fact is that there is a phosphorescent power in the eye which does not attract a person's attention under ordinary conditions, but which is distributed and reveals itself whenever the head gets a sudden shock and sometimes even in the act of sneezing. A blow on the head results in a pressure of the blood vessels upon the retina, causing either total darkness or a faint blue light which floats before the eyes, and it is in this faint blue light the imagination discerns the thousands of fantastic forms and figures that by general acceptance are termed stars; hence, while the astronomical display so frequently mentioned may be said to be entirely a creature of the imagination, there is at least some foundation for the idea. The true nature of the sensation is never very apparent, even to the victim, for the simple reason that it is invariably experienced under circumstances which render a searching introspective investigation out of the question.

He Saved the Patent Office.

When in the war of 1812 the British, who had taken Washington, trained their guns upon the patent office, Dr. Thornton, throwing himself directly before the guns, cried:

"Are you Englishmen or Goths and Vandals? This is the patent office—a depository of the ingenuity and inventions of the American nation, in which the whole civilized world is interested. Would you destroy it? Then let the charge pass through my body."

And the building was spared. Twenty-four years afterward, however, it was destroyed by fire, together with everything in it.

DOZES ON BOAT, IS DROWNED

Ohio River Fireman Falls From Chair into Jeffersonville Harbor.

Jeffersonville, Ind., July 28.—George Gravette, a fireman on the towboat Duffy, in Jeffersonville harbor, fell into the Ohio river while dozing in a chair on a boat and was drowned.

He was 45 years old. He is survived by the widow and five children.

A Losing Game.

"By having a record kept at the cashier's desk of pay checks which patrons fail to turn in I sometimes make up my losses," said the proprietor of a large restaurant. "Today a man got a check for 65 cents. To the cashier he presented one for 25 cents. The latter, glancing at his missing check card, discovered that it was one of the listed ones. Detaining the man, he notified me. After being confronted with the waiter the beat wanted to pay both checks. I ordered a policeman summoned. The man's pleading led me to show him the list of missing checks, which amounted to something like $80, saying that I didn't know but that he was the cause of them all. He offered to pay the lot if the matter would be dropped, and this proposition I accepted."—New York Sun.

Couldn't Forget It.

"Saturday night some miscreant lugged off a whole cord of my wood, and somehow I can't forget about it," declared Silas.

"Have you tried to forget it?" inquired his friend.

"Yes. Sunday morning I went to church, hoping I could get it off my mind, and before I had been there five minutes the choir started in singing 'The Lost Chord,' so I got out."—Judge.

Clyde Fitch's Joke.

"Clyde Fitch was an indefatigable worker," said an actor who has played in many of the Fitch comedies. "When he had a play on the stocks he would labor over it day and night, often scarcely pausing for his meals and getting very little sleep; consequently his health suffered. He would work until on the verge of a nervous breakdown, and then his physician would step in and force him to knock off.

"During one of these periods of enforced idleness he was lounging in the Players club one day when Harry B. Smith, the prolific comic opera librettist, strolled in.

"'What are you doing now?' asked Smith.

"'I am in my doctor's hands,' replied Fitch. 'He tells me I'm in a bad way and has absolutely forbidden me to do any brain work.'

"'That's tough,' said Smith. 'How do you manage to put in the time?'

"'Oh, I'm writing the libretto of a musical comedy!' replied Fitch, with one of his cynical smiles."—New York Times.

The Light of the Stars.

Various endeavors have been made to estimate the light of the stars. In the northern hemisphere Argelander has registered 324,000 stars down to the nine and a half magnitude, and with the aid of the best photometric data Agnes M. Clerk's "System of the Stars" gives the sum of the light of these northern stars as equivalent to 1-440 of full moonlight, while the total light of all stars similarly enumerated in both hemispheres, to the number of about 900,000, is roughly placed at 1-180 of the lunar brightness. The scattered light of still fainter celestial bodies is difficult to compute. By a photographic method Sir William Abney rated the total starlight of both hemispheres at 1-100 of full moonlight, and Professor Newcomb from visual observations of all stars at just 728 times that of Capella, or 1-80 of the light of the full moon.

It is not certain, however, that the sky would be totally dark if all stars were blotted out. Certain processes make the upper atmosphere strongly luminous at times, and we cannot be sure that this light would be totally absent.—Harper's Weekly.

MONTROSE DUE FRIDAY

Inspector Dew of Scotland Yard Will Arrive Ahead of Slayer.

Vessel on Which Dr. Crippen and Miss Le Neve Are Supposed to Be in Custody of Captain Due Soon.

Montreal, July 28.—According to calculations made here by officials of the Canadian Pacific and the White Star line, the Laurentic, bearing Inspector Dew of Scotland Yard police force, and the Montrose, on which vessel are believed to be Dr. Crippen and the Le Neve girl, have passed each other. Officials of both companies are positive that no attempt will be made at sea to transfer the London sleuth to the vessel which is supposed to be bearing his prey to Quebec.

There will be no action until one or the other of the vessels reaches Father Point, Que., where a pilot is taken on board and where a Dominion police inspector is waiting with a warrant to arrest Crippen and his companion should they be found aboard the Montrose.

Whether Dew will leave his ship at Father Point or not is uncertain. To do so will necessitate a special permit from the immigration authorities at Ottawa, as there is no quarantine station at Father Point.

DOMINION OFFICERS ACTIVE

Officer Gauvreau Will Take Charge of Prisoners at Father Point.

Father Point, Que., July 28.—Charles Gauvreau, local representative of the Dominion police, has received orders from Lieut. Col. Sherwood, chief of the Dominion police, to proceed on board the steamship Montrose when it arrived here by means of the government tender and arrest Crippen and Miss Le Neve at once. The Montrose is due to arrive Friday.

He is not to let them off the boat, but to accompany them to Quebec, where he will receive further orders.

Evansville, Ind., July 28.—Crazed by the intense heat J. F. Felker, 30 years old, attempted to kill his two brothers at their home on a farm east of this city.

They overpowered him and with the aid of three deputy sheriffs returned him to the Southern hospital, from which he was discharged six weeks ago. Felker first lost his mind as the result of a sunstroke several years ago and every heated term affects him.

ROCK ISLAND GAINS 4,842

Census Bulletin Shows Population 24,335—Columbus, O., Is 181,548.

Washington, July 28. — Census returns from Rock Island, Ill., made public, show the population to be 24,335. This is an increase of 4,842 over 1900, when the population was 19,493.

Columbus, O., has a population of 181,548, an increase of 55,988, or 44.6 per cent, over 1900, when the total was 125,560.

Census returns from Cumberland, Md., show the population to be 31,732, as compared with 17,128 in 1900.

MINERS OPPOSE COMPROMISE

Complete Returns Expected to Be Unanimous Against Proposition.

Springfield, Ill., July 28.—Returns received at the state offices of the United Mine Workers of America from locals which have voted on the Indianapolis compromise show that the compromise was rejected by a unanimous vote.

It is thought certain that the Illinois miners will reject the proposed agreement by an overwhelming majority.

Tea in Paraguay.

When the natives of Paraguay drink tea they do not pour it from a teapot into a cup, but fill a goblet made out of a pumpkin or gourd and then suck up the hot liquid through a long reed. Moreover, the tea which they use is altogether different from that which comes from China, being made out of dried and roasted leaves of a palm-like plant which grows in Paraguay and southern Brazil. The natives say that this tea is an excellent remedy for fever and rheumatism.

HARDING CHOSEN IN OHIO CONTEST

Nominated for Governor by Republican Convention.

GARFIELD WITHDRAWS NAME

Platform Regarded As a Victory for the "Regulars" and As a Slap at the Former Secretary of the Interior.

Columbus, O., July 28 — With no more concern than a poker player casting aside his discards, George B. Cox, the Republican boss of Cincinnati, flung over Judge Oren Britt Brown of Dayton, his candidate for governor in the Republican state convention and brought about the nomination of Warren G. Harding, editor of the Marion Star and an old-time Foraker man.

By this stroke Mr. Cox drubbed Senator Theodore E. Burton and prevented the nomination of Representative Nicholas Longworth, ex-President Roosevelt's son-in-law, and the candidate most favored by President Taft.

It all happened on the third ballot. Temporary Chairman Longworth had turned the gavel over to Permanent Chairman Burton, the latter had delivered his speech and John R. Malloy had called the roll of counties.

The first ballot resulted as follows: Harding, 485; Browne, 413; Garfield, 73; Longworth, 92; necessary to choice, 534.

On the second ballot the vote was: Harding, 497; Browne, 363; Longworth 156; scattering for Garfield.

Third ballot: Harding 746; Browne, 190; Longworth, 195.

Only two nominations were made, that of Judge Orrin B. Browne and Warren G. Harding. The votes for Longworth and Garfield were purely complimentary.

Garfield announced shortly after the adoption of the platform, which is looked upon as being a victory for the regulars and a slap at Garfield, that he would not be considered as a candidate. His name was not presented.

The "progressive" tariff plank was voted down early by the resolutions committee which framed a platform for adoption by the convention. The recommendations of the subcommittee which completed the first draft of the platform were not closely followed. The platform, as finally evolved by the entire committee on resolutions is practically a replica of the draft shown to President Taft by Senator Dick and State Chairman Wade Ellis at Beverly, Mass.

The conservation plank, however, is that presented by Garfield men on the committee and the indorsement of the national administration is a modification of the suggestions of both sides.

While Senator Burton was speaking announcement was made that Carmi A. Thompson, secretary of state, and James R. Garfield had withdrawn their candidacies for governor. It was forecasted that this move would mean a coalition of the Burton-Ellis-Dick-Garfield wing of the convention on Warren G. Harding, former lieutenant governor and the solidification of the following of Judge O. B. Brown of Dayton, the Cox candidate for governor.

OHIO CHOICE PLEASES TAFT

President Believes Mr. Harding Is Worthy Opponent for Harmon.

Biddeford Pool, Me., July 18.—The news that Warren G. Harding of Marion, O., had been nominated by the Buckeye Republican convention came to Mr. Taft by wireless from Beverly.

When he stepped ashore here, the president told friends who met him that he considered Harding a good man to make the fight against Judson Harmon, the Democratic nominee. Mr. Taft thinks Harding is a forceful man and the best orator in Ohio, with the exception of former Senator Foraker.

CAT BITE CAUSES DEATH

James Hardy, 57, Dies in Terrible Agony of Hydrophobia.

Victim Predicted His Death a Day Before It Occurred While in Apparent Usual Good Health.

New York, July 28.—James Hardy, 57, died here in terrible agony from a cat bite which developed hydrophobia. Hardy predicted his death 24 hours before it happened in talks with friends and made all arrangements for the funeral. To all appearances he was enjoying good health and he was ridiculed when he stated Tuesday that he would die Wednesday.

The stricken man sent for Father Peter Reilly, who notice signs of approaching death and administered extreme uction a short time before the arrival of the angel of death. Hardy was employed by the Standard Oil company and while playing with an evil tempered cat the feline sank its teeth into two fingers of his left hand. Hardy killed the cat, had his hand dressed and dismissed the matter from his mind until hydrophobia developed, ending in his death.

A Lesson With His Autograph.

An admirer once wrote to Lowell describing his autograph collection and concluding with the remark, "I would be much obliged for your autograph." The reply came, bearing with it a lesson on the correct use of the words "would" and "should," which deeply impressed itself on the mind of the recipient. The response read:

Pray, do not say hereafter, "I would be obliged." If you would be obliged, be obliged and have done with it. Say, "I should be obliged," and oblige yours truly,

QUEEN WILHELMINA

Ruler of Holland Who Invests Heavily in U. S. Coal Lands.

QUEEN BUYS COAL LAND

Coal Property Located in Alabama Acquired by Ruler.

Product of Mines Will Be Shipped to Holland and Company Is Capitalized at $2,000,000.

Cullman, Ala., July 27.—Queen Wilhelmina of Holland has recently invested about $750,000 in coal lands in this section of Alabama and her agents are willing to make further investments. As a result of Queen Wilhelmina's investment there has been organized the Cullman Coal and Coke company, with a capital of $2,000,000. The queen owns nearly half the stock of the company and the remainder is held by Holland capitalists.

This company will mine the coal, the bulk of which will be shipped to Holland. The queen was induced to make the investment by a relative who visited Cullman. Cullman and adjoining country is largely settled by Dutch and Germans.

BOY FALLS INTO HOG TROUGH

Eldred Sly, 10, Badly Injured by Pokers Before Rescued.

Port Huron, Mich., July 28.—Eldred Sly, 10-year-old son of Charles Sly, of Twenty-Fourth street, came dangerously near being chewed to pieces by some hungry hogs.

The boy was on the Mills farm near Marysville and when he went to feed the porkers he fell into the trough. The boy was terribly torn by the ravenous hogs before assistance arrived, but he will recover.

Making Money Two Ways.

Our five cent pieces, of course, are merely tokens, deriving their purchasing power from the fiat of the treasury. The metal blanks for them cost only about 14 cents a hundred. When the expense of stamping the designs upon them is added they come to something like $3,510 a million—that is to say, for this amount the government produces $50,000 worth of nickels, making a clear profit of $46,490 on the transaction.—Saturday Evening Post.

Waiting.

The Almighty has not freighted the foot with a single superfluous part. Every inch of every foot is meant for use. When a man walks in the right way, speaking literally, the back of the heel strikes the ground first. Then the rest of the heel comes down, after which the outer edge of the foot takes the bulk of the burden until the forward movement shifts the weight to the ball of the foot and finally to the toes. The ideal step is a slightly rocking motion. At no time should the entire foot be pressed against the ground. Heel to toe is the movement. Try it and see how much farther and more easily you can walk. It's the Indian's way, and what poor Lo doesn't know about footwork can go into the discard.—New York Press.

POSTAL SAVINGS PLAN TO BE TRIED

Board of Trustees to Establish One Bank in Each State.

APPROPRIATION IS INADEQUATE

Postmasters of 300 Offices Ask to Be Designated to Accept Savings—Nearly 644 National Banks Seeking Appointment.

Washington, July 27.—It was said authoritatively that the government will establish postal savings banks at several cities on Oct. 1. The indications are that the system will be tried out in the beginning at postoffices of the second and third class, rather than in those of the first class, as originally planned. If the board of trustees, composed of the postmaster general, the attorney general, secretary of the treasury, follows a recommendation that is to be made by the departmental committee, a postal savings bank will be established in each of the forty-seven states at the outset. When the board of trustees met soon after congress adjourned it was announced that the new banking plan would not be installed until some time in the new year.

It was also tentatively agreed at the time that not more than a dozen banks should be put into commission at the beginning and that offices of the first class should be tried for experimental purposes. The committee having the details in hand has come to the conclusion that owing to the small appropriation available it would be better if banks were introduced into the smaller offices first. The belief is entertained that in the larger cities deposits would pile up more rapidly, thus increasing the cost of administration.

There is a lively interest on the part of the postmasters in the postal savings bank law. More than 300 of them have asked that their offices be designated to accept postal savings. Nearly 644 national banks have requested that they be designated as depositories of postal funds. It is the expectation of the postal officials that at the next session of congress adequate appropriation will be made for all purposes of the postal savings banks.

TWO DEAD; CAR HITS AUTO

Central Illinois People Victims of an Accident at Niantic.

Decatur, Ill., July 28. — Two persons were killed outright at Niantic, Ill., when an interurban trolley car of the Decatur-Springfield line struck an automobile containing prominent central Illinois people. J. P. Faris and Mrs. Nelson Mansfield lost their lives.

Nelson Mansfield, a wealthy grain dealer, is expected to die. Bert Faris, son of J. P. Faris, was severely injured.

EXCURSION TRAIN WRECKED

Hundreds of Women and Children Have Narrow Escape in Ohio.

Bucyrus, O., July 28.—An excursion train on the Toledo and Ohio Central from Mount Gilead ran into a Big Four freight at Martel, ten miles south of Bucyrus. The entire train of seven coaches went off the rails.

William Grimes Bucyrus, was the only person seriously hurt. Hundreds of women and children in the wreck had narrow escapes.

TO SHUT DOWN TWO WEEKS

Buick Plant at Flint Will Be Idle During Inventory.

Flint, Mich., July 28. — The Buick Motor company will close all of its factories in this city Friday night and will remain shut down for two weeks while the annual inventory is in progress.

"We will resume operatoins after the inventory with a full force of men," said W. H. Little, factory manager of the Buick company.

HENRI ROCHETTE SENT TO PRISON

French Napoleon of Finance Is Convicted After Long Delay.

TRIED 33 TIMES IN TWO YEARS

Noted Members of Chamber of Deputies and Other Prominent Men Involved in Scandal—Embezzlement Basis of Charge.

Paris, July 28.—Henri Rochette, the French Napoleon of finance, who planned the most wonderful schemes and involved legislators and others in his plans, was found guilty of embezzlement and sentenced to two years' imprisonment and to pay a fine of $600.

The "Affaire Rochette" has excited France since March, 1908, and only recently was the cause of several interpellations in the chamber of deputies as to whether former President Clemenceau, M. Lepine, the Prefect of Paris, and other prominent men were involved in the scandal.

Rochette began his career as an errand boy in a country saloon. He went to Paris, took a course in a commercial school and launched out as a company promoter. He was then 21. Not a year has passed since 1900 that he has not promoted some company with a capital of millions of francs. Branch offices of his Paris house were established in forty or fifty different French cities. He catered to small investors and with the wonderful returns which he made, succeeded in interesting some of the most prominent men in France in his schemes. At the time of his arrest four years ago he was planning to consolidate the different traffic systems of Paris on a scale and plan similar to that in New York. This scheme would have involved him in an issue of stocks and bonds to the amount of one billion francs. Just about this time Rochette was arrested charged with embezzlement, the amount of which it was said might reach 100,000,000 francs. Two of Rochette's enterprises were the "Banque Franco-Espagnole" and the "Credit Minier." These yielded 12 per cent a year. Rochette did business on an average of about $20,000 a day.

An investigation was made into the condition of the two concerns referred to above. Greatly to the surprise of everyone it was found that they were apparently sound and prosperous. In the safes of the Credit Minier alone there was found $2,200,000 in bank notes and gold, and $6,000,000 in valid securities.

The Rochette followers denounced his arrest and insisted that he should be free in order to continue his business. But the authorities did not want this and had the Credit Minier declared officially bankrupt. This tied Rochette up, as the Credit Minier was his principal source for securing working capital for his enterprises. Rochette, however, succeeded in borrowing $370,000 from other financiers and with great judgment and skill carried on the affairs of his companies. Rochette was brought before the police court thirty-three times in the last two years. His last trial resulted.

The matter was finally brought up in the chamber of deputies and M. Lepine was called upon to explain his conduct in arresting Rochette. Serious charges were made against former Premier Clemenceau, who is now in Buenos Ayres, to the effect that he had realized $300,000 by the "Affaire Rochette" and several duels were threatened. Finally parliament passed a vote of confidence in M. Briand's ministry and left the whole matter to the law courts for settlement.

BROOKLYN TABERNACLE BIBLE STUDIES

FORGIVING AND BEING FORGIVEN.

Matthew 18:21 35.—July 31.

"If ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you."—Matthew 6:14.

ST. PETER'S query. "Lord, how often shall my brother sin against me and I forgive him, until seven times?" is a query that comes to many. It is a question that at some time and in some manner or form is quite sure to come to all the followers of Christ. Imperfect ourselves and surrounded by others who are imperfect, we continually have need to exercise mercy, benevolence, forgiveness. There is something in the human mind which naturally appreciates justice and takes special note of injustice done toward us. It is also remarkable how many people take a delight in meting out justice to an offender against the law. It is this spirit which has been noted in mobs. Men and women and children work themselves into a very frenzy, as advocates of justice, in expressions against a guilty wretch who escapes the clutches of the law and a just penalty, and insist upon taking vengeance into their own hands. It would appear that many of those who participate in mobs have at times been guilty of nearly or quite as great crimes as those which they reprehend in another and would punish. It would appear that there is a craving in the fallen flesh to do violence to another, or to see violence done, if only there could be an excuse for it on the score of justice. Alas, poor creatures, how wrong such a condition of heart, how reprehensible in the sight of God! And yet those who thus wrongfully give loose rein to their passions, quiet their own consciences, at least, by concluding that they are viewing the matter like God, loving justice and hating iniquity.

It is true that Justice is the foundation of Divine Government—that God is just; but it is also true that God is loving and kind, and that he accepts to himself the very name of love, for "God is love." Such should learn that to be in the Divine likeness is to govern one's self and one's course by the rules of justice, but to measure the course of others by the rule of love and sympathy, generosity and forgiveness.

In answer to St. Peter's question, our Lord said that we should forgive a brother not only seven times, but seventy times seven. What a breadth of generosity is here suggested! How it tells us of the loving mercy and forgiveness of him with whom we have to do! But let us remember another statement of this same matter, where it is implied that before the forgiveness is granted. It is to be at least desired, if not sought. "If thy brother trespass against thee seven times in a day and seven times in a day shall say, 'I repent;' thou shalt forgive him"—or to the extent of seventy times seven. We must even assume that the Lord meant that in our hearts we should already forgive the brother his trespasses, even though we might wisely wait to express our forgiveness until his attitude manifested some desire for it. The disciples of Christ are to be continually in the attitude of generosity and filled with the spirit of forgiveness as is the heavenly Father—ready and waiting to be gracious, and under proper conditions, to manifest that readiness.

To illustrate this matter the Master spoke a parable. He said, "The kingdom of heaven is like unto a certain King which would take account of his servants" (vs. 23). But, as we understand him, he meant that the church at the present time is the embryotic Kingdom and is being dealt with by the Lord after the manner of the illustration in this parable. It is not therefore an illustration of God's dealing with the world. He is not dealing with the world at all. He is not calling them his servants in any sense of the word—only believers, consecrated ones, occupy this favorable position of Divine relationship and only these are meant in the parable. Furthermore, the parable does not even consider the church on the score of original sin. It is not the thought that original sin may be canceled on account of prayer. The penalty for original sin needed to be paid, not by the prayer of the sinners, but by the precious blood of Christ. But after having our sins forgiven through turning from sin and faith in Christ, and through consecration to the Lord and begetting of the holy spirit, then we are his servants, and the parable relates to these only.

The first servant mentioned in the parable had been very derelict as a servant of God. As a follower of Christ he had come far short. The time of reckoning came. He realized it and besought Divine favor and mercy, promising to do all he could to make up for the deficiencies. He was heard; the sentence upon him was stayed. But when he went forth to find a fellow servant who owed him a trifling sum, and would have no mercy upon him, his master was very angry and declared that he, too, must be harshly dealt with and receive no mercy, because he had shown none to his fellow-servant. His lord's words were, "Shouldest not thou also have had compassion (mercy) upon thy fellow servant even as I had mercy on thee?" And his lord "delivered him to the tormentors until he should pay all that was due." The amount due would not include any part of the penalty of original sin, but merely the penalty for the short comings of the transgressor as respects his Covenant relationship, as a servant who was also a debtor from the time he became a servant.

The Lord's words concluding the parable are, "So shall also my heavenly Father do unto you, if ye from your hearts forgive not every one his brother his trespasses." In another text our Lord inculcates the same thought in different words, saying: "If ye forgive men their trespasses your heavenly Father will also forgive you."

The purpose and object of our heavenly Father in thus dealing with us seems not clear to all. It is not that he wishes to retaliate. It is not that he would say to us, "If you are mean towards others I will be mean towards you." Rather the lesson is this, "I am kind to the unthankful; I have been very gracious to you in the forgiveness of your original sin and in accepting your consecration to be my servant and in bringing you into my family, but I have called you into this position for a special purpose and you will not be at all prepared for the service I desire for you unless you learn the lesson of forgiveness and generosity; hence, for your sake I make the rule that I will be no more generous to you and your imperfections than you are generous toward your brethren in their imperfections. I do this in order to teach you a great lesson which cannot be so well learned in any other way. What I am seeking in you as my servant is perfection in my character-likeness. You are inclined to look at the justice of my character and to copy it and to deal severely with others who are your debtors. I wish to make clear to you that the grandest elements of my character are illustrated from the standpoint of my love and sympathy, my kindness and forbearance. Because I desire you to progress in this character-likeness and so come to the position where I can use you in my service more abundantly, therefore I rule that you must be forgiving and gracious one toward another even as I have already been gracious toward you, and even as I propose yet further to be gracious to you, if you will abide in harmony with my spirit of love and seek to walk in my way. I am ready to forgive the loving and generous who are seeking to copy my character; I am ready to be kind and generous and forgiving to the greatest degree."

"The kindest and the happiest pair
Will find occasion to forbear,
And something every day they live
To pity, and perhaps forgive."

ANOTHER GIFT FOR ADRIAN

Wm. E. Bixby a resident of St Louis, Mo., and a former resident of Adrian has remembered his home town with a gift of $25,000, for a hospital the stipulation being that the city guarantee to maintain the same and provide a reserve fund for emergencies. The gift has been accepted and the aldermen voted to establish an emergency fund of $2,500, and take steps to build the hospital at once.

Mr. Bixby is a retired capitalist only 53 years old and has begun to do good in time to enjoy it himself.

That Playground.

Adrian is getting ahead nicely for the youngsters. Judge R. A. Watts one of Adrians big hearted men has purchased a plot of ground formerly known as the McKenzie brick yard of about 2 1 2 acres of land bounded by McKenzie College Ave. Maumee and Park Sts.

The judge thinks it as cheap to pay taxes as to buy windows for his residence. The west Branch boys have used this in past years for a play ground but have been forbidden of late years by the owners. In the early fall the grounds will be leveled and aparatus installed so they may play baseball football Tennis and C & C.

He also has in mind a scheme for winter if a lot adjacent can be purchased of Mrs Luther it can be leveled and made smooth so that it may be flooded by artificial means and used as a skating rink. Adrian boys should feel that they were highly favored.

Various suggestions have been brought forward as to the best and easie t way of raising the Maine in such shape that repairs can be made in the most effective manner.

Engineer ORouke has advanced the theory that a cradle of cables can be constructed whereby the ship can be swung above water.

It is interesting to read all the many suggestions good, bad and indifferent that various people offer.

To us who know so little of such things it seems wonderful that it may be possible to do this and that someday the mystery that surrounds the Maine map be made clear.

The Poor School Ma'ams

A novel contract was that signed by Miss Lou Dysinger, a former student of Adrian College.

She has taken a school in a small village near Omaha. The contract read that she shall receive a certain amount each month as salary and if she is still single at the end of nine months she is to receive quite a considerable salary extra.

Cupid has been quite busy in his work among their teachers in the last w years, hence this new departure. ss Dysinger does not say whether she expects the reward or not but she has accepted the contract.

BLUE RIBBON RACES

Held in Detroit August 1-5.

Recent miles on the part of trotters and pacers being prepared for their engagements in the grand circuit indicate that extreme speed will prevail in all of the races during Detroit's famous blue ribbon meeting, August 1 to 5. The Chamber of Commerce and Merchants' & the Manufactures' stakes will have to be sensatianal to a degree to furnish better sport this year than the purse events.

One of the races for developed trotters promises to make turf history. This is the 2:07 trot on August 2, in which The Harvester and Bob Douglas meet Spanish Queen. Two years ago this splendid mare won the M. & M. and clever as she then was, she is better and faster to day. Recently she trotted a mile in 2:05 on the Detroit track, one of the quarters at the rate of 1:56, so that she is fit and ready to fight it out with either of the aspirants for the stallion crown.

The three-year-olds that start in the $15,000 furturities on August 1 are reported to be in excellent shape and a wonderful race is expected, because of the inducemeut. This is the first futurity given by the Detroit Driving Club, and serves to round off the blue ribbon meeting and make it complete in every detail.

The free-for-all pace on Thursday, August 4, will introduce that wonderful gray horse, The Eel, and, fast as he is he will have to be at his very best to beat such race horses as Alleen Wilson, Darkey Hal, George Gano and Ross K.

Such events, with the unusual fields that will score in the M. & M. and Chamber of Commerce, cannot fail to keep the blue ribbon to the forefront of all meetings. Michigan people are lucky when they can see such racing within the confines of their state, and in a city where a week is as delightful as it always is in Detroit.

"Poetry and lovemaking should be carried on witn caution," says Elbert Hubbard. Sounds like hot weather advice.

Enthusiasm.

The organist sent a little boy to inquire of the minister what the first hymn would be. "Tell him," said the minister, "I would like 'Carol, Brothers, Carol.'"

The little boy thought he said "Howl, Brothers, Howl," and told the organist that the minister's selection was "Yell, Brothers. Yell."—New York Times.

Why He Applauded.

"Are you fond of music?" asked a stranger of the young man at the concert who was applauding vigorously after a pretty girl had sung a song in a very painful way.

"Not particularly," replied the young man frankly, "but I am extremely fond of the musician."

Itching Skin Quickly Cooled

Itching skin troubles some people as soon as the hot weather comes. There seems to be no preventive; but when the trouble does break out, it is a very simple matter to stop that itch and to stop it instantly.

Just a few drops of gentle winter-green lotion mixed with thymol and washed over the eruption will soothe and smooth the skin instantly, giving that cooled refreshing sensation.

Try a 25 cent bottle of this lotion, D. D. D. Prescription. It will stop the itch, not in half an hour, not in ten minutes, but in five seconds. If you will call at our store, we will tell you more of this D. D. D. compound.

Grain Drills

Last week we talked about plowing. Next comes the sowing of wheat. More care should be taken in using an up-to-date grain drill. We recommend the FARMER'S FAVORITE and SUPERIOR. These two drills have stood the test of years as far as accuracy and durability are concerned. We can furnish them in either hoe, disc, plain or fert

Please remember this. The demand is greater than the supply and those who wait too long are not going to be able to secure a drill this fall. Samples are now ready for inspection.

FERTILIZER

As in former years, we will sell the HOMESTEAD brands and if you want results, do as so many others are doing, come to us and tell us your soils and we will guarantee to sell you a brand for your particular soil that will be a winner.

Your soil is like a sick person. The wrong medicine will do no good. Our business is to please you, so you will come back again another season.

It also says thot Americans are "chesty" by nature, and have a bump of conceit that started to grow in 1776 and more in the same vein. The Editorial is quite interesting throughout.

BASE BALL

The Tecumseh Independents defeated the Manchester Browns on the home diamond this afternoon by a score of 5 and 3. The game was a pitcher's battle between Homestien for the visitors and Lenardson for Tecumseh, the latter having a trifle the better of the argument, the locals hits being longer drives. But 4 hits were made off Lenardson and 5 off Homestien. Batteries Manchester—Homestien and Sloat. Tecumseh—Lenardson and Heesen.

GRANGERS, ATTENTION!

There seems to be a misunderstanding regarding the Grange picnic at Devil's lake, August 4. This is not the Lenawee-Hillsdale Co's. Farmer's picnic called "The Big Picnic"—but rather a picnic of a few granges in the vicinity of Devil's lake. The Grange picnic at Fruit Ridge, August 4, is the regular Pomona Grange meeting with with the additional features of a rally or picnic. Geo. S. Ladd, past master of Mass. State Grange the principal speaker. The regular picnic of the Granges and Farmer's Clubs of Northern Lenawee Co. will be held August 13 at Sand lake, Putnams Landing, with J. C. Ketcham of Hastings the speaker of the day.

Speaking About Drills

There are many good drills with many good points, but after looking into all of them carefully you will admit as others do, that there is only one BEST,

"ONTARIO"

Grain and Fertilizer Drills.

Have taken the lead in this vicinity lately on account of their simplicity and good features.

Just a few of the good things:

1—It is built on honor and sold under guarantee.
2—It is built of the best material and no drill is better finished.
3—It has anti-friction roller bearings.
4—No neck weight. Properly balanced,
5—Most accurate, double force feed distributer sold.
6—It has the Everett fertilizer force feed.
7—Best hub on any drill. No loose gears.
8—Large axle. Large hoppers. Broad wheel tread.

Ask Abner Wilson, one of our good farmers, how he likes them. Come in and see drill and take one home.

Free Sample Aids Old Men

The sudden change from years of activity of both body and mind to the quiet of later years causes the human system to undergo many changes, chief of which is in the digestive organs.

It becomes harder and harder to get the bowels to move promptly and regularly and in consequence many elderly men suffer not only from the basic trouble, constipation, but from indigestion, headache, belching, sour stomach, drowsiness after eating and similar annoyances. It is first of all necessary to keep the bowels open and then to tone the digestive muscles so as to get them to again do their work naturally. A violent cathartic or purgative is not only unnecessary but harmful, and something mild will do the work just as well.

After you have got through experimenting with salts and pills and waters of various kinds, and have become convinced that they do only temporary good at best, then try Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, a mild, gentle, pleasant-tasting laxative tonic that is especially adapted to the requirements of old people, women and children, and yet is effective enough for anybody. Your druggist, who has handled it successfully for a quarter of a century, will sell you a bottle for fifty cents or one dollar, but if you want to make a test of it before spending any money send your name and address to Dr. Caldwell and he will gladly send you a sample bottle free of charge.

This remedy is rapidly displacing all other forms of medication for the cure of stomach, liver and bowel trouble, and families like Mr. O. P. Wisher's of Sycamore, Ill., and Mrs. Carrie Culler's of 325 N. Notre Dame street, South Bend, Ind., are now never without it in the house. They have tested it and know its grand value to every member of the family.

Dr. Caldwell personally will be pleased to give you any medical advice you may desire for yourself or family pertaining to the stomach, liver or bowels absolutely free of charge. Explain your case in a letter and he will reply to you in detail. For the free sample simply send your name and address on a postal card or otherwise. For either request the doctor's address is Dr. W. B. Caldwell, R.600 Caldwell building, Monticello, Ill.

Speak For Yourself, John.

The Lord Leicester of a century ago had no sons by his first marriage and, being well on in years, was anxious to see his heir apparent, a nephew, happily wedded. His wish was that a charming daughter of his neighbor, the Earl of Albemarle, should be the future Lady Leicester. With her and her sisters he used to enjoy his morning rides. One morning she came alone, and during the ride he asked, thinking to forward his nephew's interests, "Anne, my dear, how should you like to be mistress of Holkham?" "There is nothing I should like better," she replied. "Then I shall send my nephew William to court you," said the earl, glad that the fates seemed to favor his project. But the lady calmly and gravely answered, "I shall never be mistress of Holkham on those terms." "Why," exclaimed the astonished old gentleman, looking the lady hard in the face, "you don't mean to say you would marry me?" "Yes, indeed I would," was the answer, "and nothing I should wish better." And as a consequence the nephew did not succeed to the earldom.—London Chronicle.

Perseverance.

Timour, the great Asiatic conqueror, commonly known by the name of Tamerlane, had extraordinary perseverance. No difficulties ever led him to recede from what he had once undertaken, and he often persisted in his efforts under circumstances which led all around him to despair. On such occasions he used to relate to his friend an anecdote of his early life. "I once," he said, "was forced to take shelter from my enemies in a ruined building, where I sat alone many hours. Desiring to divert my mind from my hopeless condition, I fixed my eyes on an ant that was carrying a grain of corn larger than itself up a high wall. I numbered the efforts it made to accomplish this object. The grain fell sixty-nine times to the ground, but the insect persevered, and the seventieth time it reached the top. This sight gave me courage at the moment, and I never forgot the lesson."

Wolf-Skin Garments.

If those big wolf and coyote skin overcoats such as are worn to Kansas City by Northwestern stockmen in winter and farmers could talk many thrilling and interesting hunting yarns would be added to hunting lore, in the Dakotas, Nebraska and Wyoming, especially, where coats of this kind are a winter's necessity for men out of doors, trapping and killing wolves and coyotes for their skins is quite an industry and is followed with profit by hunters. Many of them are Indians who are skilled in the use of the needle and scissors and realize the full profit on the garment by making it themselves to the customer's order. The best wolf-skin coats sell for $150 and none for less than $100. The legs of the pelt cannot be used and for a large coat ten skins are required. Extreme care must be taken of the coats in summer, however, to keep the moths out of the fur. They are heavier than any sort of an ulster of cloth and remain rainproof even after days of exposure.

E. W. Hart, of Brock, Neb., who was at the Blossom House one night recently, had one of those coats with a story, or rather with twelve stories, for there was one attached to each of the many skins it was made up of.

"I am not much of a hunter," said Mr. Hart," and was six years in killing enough wolves to make this coat. It is a home-made affair and a bit rough on the edges, but good enough for a stockmen. The skin from which the sleeves are made was obtained with difficulty. The wolf was the largest of the lot, a female, and half starved at the time I captured her. I jumped in among the hounds after she was down to keep them from tearing her throat, but before I could get a firm hold upon her jaws she slipped loose and fastened her teeth in my coat sleeve. I was compelled to let her go, shake her off and let the dogs again catch and kill her. I must have chased, shot at and tried to trap fifty of the beasts before I killed enough to make the coat. They are popular out our way and the greatest garment of their kind, but hard to get."—Kansas City Star.

Water [illegible]

Free water drinking is an essential to vitality and to the development of staying power. All the operations of the body, digestion, assimilation, absorption, elimination of poisonous waste and so on, are carried on by means of water; and an insufficient amount of water in the system means embarrassment of every function. The body of a man of average weight contains more than half a barrel of water, and such a body needs for its proper operation at least two quarts daily of pure water. In this connection, it may not be irrelevant to mention that the Japanese soldiers, whose surprising powers are now engaging the admiration of the world, consume each between two and four gallons of water daily.—W. R. C. Latson, M. D., in the Outing Magazine.

There's a certain way to find relief;
A sure way to be cured.
Doan's Kidney Pills will do it.

Tecumseh people endorse this claim.

Mrs. Jeanett Teachout, N. Oneida street, Tecumseh, Mich., says: "I again take pleasure in recommending Doan's Kidney Pills to persons afflicted with kidney trouble. Last fall my kidneys became disordered and I suffered from pains in the small of my back. If I stooped sharp twinges seized me and for a few seconds I was unable to straighten. Too frequent passages of kidney secretions also annoyed me greatly and the doctor was unable to help me. Doan's Kidney Pills were so highly spoken of that I procured a box and began their use. I was so promptly relieved that I continued taking the remedy until my trouble had disappeared."

She Was Numerous.

Armed For Peace.

Wife—Will your disarmament meeting finish late? Husband—Yes, about midnight, I expect. But don't be nervous. I shall have my revolver.—Bon Vivant.

Herr Hagel, a rich and influential Berlin banker, frequently had watches picked from his pocket. At first he had recourse to all kinds of safety chains; then one morning he took no precautions whatever, and quietly allowed himself to be robbed. At night, on returning from his business, he took up the evening paper; he uttered an exclamation of delight. A watch had exploded in a man's hands. The victim's hands were shattered and the left eye destroyed. The crafty banker had filled the watch case with dynamite, which exploded in the operation of winding.

One of the most inveterate hoarders on record was George IV. Not only was he averse to destroying books, and papers but he preserved everything that could possibly be kept. When he died all the suits of clothes he had worn for 20 years were discovered and sold at public auction. His executors also found secreted in various desks, drawers and cupboards, numerous pocketbooks crammed full of money, to the extent, it is said, of $20,000, together with more sentimental treasures in the form of lockets of hair from the tresses of forgotten beauties of the court.—London Chronicle.

ILLINOIS TURTLE FARM.

A mud turtle farm, which will also be devoted to the raising of mushrooms, gold fish and guinea pigs, is the latest venture of the head of one of the big Western Railroads. President H. I. Miller of the Chicago and Eastern Illinois is the man who has hit upon this novel form of diversified farming as a relief from business cares, and he intends incidentally to show the formers of the grain belt guinea pigs will pay bigger dividends than even 80 cent corn.

The farm is located at Barrington, a suberb of Chicago, and is a tract of rolling timbered land. Numerous lagoons and roads are being dug at various points on the property and an elaborate system of irrigating ditches will be established. The guinea pig yards will cover several acres and will be the largest, it is expected, in the country. The mushrooms will be allowed to grow wild wherever they will in marshy spots and damp nooks in the woods.

With the starting of the farm comes to light some interesting facts about a little known industry. It is estimated that over 10,000 turtles are consumed annuallly in Chicago restaurants. Some of them are terrapin, but the greater part are mud turtles, soft shells and snappers. The demand for mushrooms is enormous.—Macomb Journal.

Ballooning as a Fad.

The airship crank of a year ago is a scientist today. In the rooms of the Aero Club they have a model airship on exhibition. Attached to it is a rubber motor. The machine is made to fly about 20 feet, and there is always an interesting audience watching the flight. All of which shows that the public is beginning to be interested in aerial trips. In a tailor's window nearby is a woman's ballooning suit. The suit is of soft gray cloth, with a smart jacket, fitted over a waistcoat of red silk, and knickerbockers. "This is the third balloon suit I have made for the wives of rich aeronauts," said the tailor. "They are all knicker suits. Ballooning is too dangerous to admit of cumbersome and entangling skirts. Pretty and modest rigs they are."—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Insuring forests against destruction by fire is an innovation in the Northwest. One company has 3,000,000 acres under its charge. The forests are patrolled by rangers to guard against fires.

As a man was having his luncheon in the coffee room of a Birmingham hotel he was much annoyed by an other visitor, who during the whole of the meal stood with his back to the fire warming himself and watching him partake of his repast. At length, unable to endure it any longer, he rang the bell and said: "Waiter, kindly turn that gentleman round; I think he is done on that side."

One of the objects of the recent Stratford-on-Avon exhibition of ancient domestic furnishings illustrated Shakespeare's line, "And burn sweet wood to make the chamber sweet." It was a thing that looked like a pair of wafer irons, but it was in reality a pair of bellows with a little chamber in the nozzle of which "sweet wood," like sandal or fragrant herbs, could be inserted in company with a bit of live charcoal. On working the bellows a smoke of exceeding good smell would be diffused in the room.

How Mastodons Died.

Discussing the production of ivory, Vladimir Fedoreff, of St. Petersburg, Russia, said Siberia furnishes a large quantity of ivory to the markets of the world, but that the production of it belongs to another age and to a species of animal that does not now exist. The ivory is cut from the tusks of the mastodons whose skeletons are found frozen in masses of ice or buried in the mud of Siberian rivers and swamps. The northern portion of the country abounds in extensive bogs, which are called urmans. In these are found the tusks of the mastodon, from which it is inferred these animals lost their lives venturing upon a surface that would not bear their weight.

Even to wild animals these urmans are forbidden ground. The nimble stepping, broad-hoofed reindeer can sometimes cross them safely in the summer time, but most of the other large animals attempting to do so would quickly be engulfed, and this may be a partial explanation of the remains of the mammoth and the rhinoceros which are so abundant and so widely diffused through these northern marsh lands of Siberia.

In the museum of Tobolsk are numerous specimens of the mammoth, and throughout that region they are by no means rare. When an ice pack breaks down a river bank or floods tear up a frozen marsh or the summer thaw penetrates a little more deeply than usual into the ground some of these antediluvian monsters are likely to be exposed. In many cases the remains are so fresh and well preserved, with the dark, shaggy hair and underwool of reddish brown, their tufted ears and long, curved tusks, that all the aborigines, and even some of the Russian settlers, persist in the belief that they are specimens of animals which still live, burrowing underground like moles and dying the instant they are admitted to the light.

When a young woman drops her glasses there is usually a young man on hand to pick it up.

Storm Sweeps Lake Como.

Milan, Italy, July 28.—Several large boats have been wrecked in a storm which swept Lake Como, and it is feared there has been heavy loss of life.

"All Things Come."

The magnate looked up impatiently from his work.

"Well, my good man," he snapped at the diffident rural person who stood twirling his rusty hat, "what can I do for you?"

"I guess ye don't remember me, Hank," faltered the caller. "But you an' me use ter go swimmin' together in th' ol' town. Then you got a job in th' bank, an' I got a job in th' grocery store."

"This is all very interesting, and I seem to remember your face. But come to the point—my time is valuable."

"Yes, Hank. You got a better offer and left the old village. I stayed plugging along in th' grocery store."

"Well, well?"

"Well, Hank, when you left you owed $73.82 on a grocery bill. Here's where you pay up!"—Cleveland Leader.

A Remodeled Text.

"Perhaps you could preach us a sermon about the condition of things in our town," says the resident pastor to the visiting one. "Saloons, gambling houses and the like run wide open all the time, and the officers pay no attention to them."

"Yes," agrees the visitor; "I might take as my text, 'There's no arrest for the wicked.'"—Judge.

20 NEGROES KILLED BY TEXAS MOB

Number Dead May be Much Larger.

NO RESISTANCE OFFERED

Workers Are Shot Down In Cold Blood By Law Breakers.

MANY ARRESTS TO BE MADE

Outrage Occurs In Slocum and Denson Counties In Texas.

Palestine, Tex., Aug. 1.—A posse of more than 100 armed men, headed by Capt. Godfrey Reese Fowler, who recently returned from Nicaragua, where he was in command of artillery forces of the revolutionary army, has been scouring the country around the Slocum and Denson settlements in this county since early Saturday night, hunting down negroes and white men who are involved in the racial trouble that led to the killing of more than twenty negroes. A company of state militia from Marshall and a detachment of rangers from Austin have also arrived and are in control of the situation. The slaughter of the negroes was not the result of any race war, although the feeling which the wholesale killing engendered threatened for a time to cause an uprising on the part of negroes of two communities.

Mobs of white men started out Friday night and rode from cabin to cabin, calling out the negroes who had been marked for the slaughter and shot them down in their tracks. This work of carnage continued all Friday night and with the dawning of a new day the lust of the [illegible] seemed to increase. Negroes were shot and killed on the highways and in the fields, where they were working, despite the prayers and pleadings which they made that their lives be spared.

While twenty dead bodies of victims have been found scattered along the roads and over the country, it may never be definitely known how many more negroes were murdered in out of the way places, where their remains may never be found. So far as learned, the negroes who were killed, offered no resistance to the mob.

The wholesale slaughter of negroes was brought about by the report that reached the ears of white men of the Slocum community that secret meetings of the blacks had been held at which plans were formulated for burning the barns and residences of certain white citizens.

A number of white men, who are alleged to have belonged to the mob, will be arrested and placed in jail as soon as warrants can be issued and served. It is stated several suspects have been taken into custody by the local officers. Many negroes have fled from Slocum and Denson communities.

JOHN G. CARLISLE

Former Secretary of Treasury Under Cleveland Who Is Dead.

JOHN G. CARLISLE DIES IN NEW YORK

Was Former Secretary of the Treasurer Under Cleveland

HIS LAST ILLNESS VERY SHORT

Succumbs to Acute Indigestion at the Hotel Wolcott—Living Members of Family Were Present When the End Came.

New York, Aug. 1.—John Griffin Carlisle, former speaker of the house of representatives, United States senator and secretary of the treasury in President Cleveland's second administration, died at 10:50 o'clock Sunday night at the Hotel Wolcott, No. 4 West Thirty-First street. He had been failing rapidly the greater part of the day. He suffered a sinking spell between 3 and 4 o'clock Sunday morning, from which he was revived by the use of oxygen. His physicians said at the time that it could scarcely be hoped that his strength would hold out against another such attack. The second attack came at 6:30 last night and he weakened steadily to the time of his death. He was conscious, except at intervals during the early time of his final illness, and up to within a minute or two of his death.

Mr. Carlisle was taken ill last November with an intestinal trouble. He had come to New York at the time to appear before a master in chancery appointed by the United States supreme court in the matter of Virginia against West Virginia. It was found necessary to remove him to a hospital and he was taken to St. Vincent's, where he remained until February, when he was sufficiently improved to go to the home of his granddaughter, Mrs. Frederick Lathrop Allen, at 319 West End avenue. He remained at Mrs Allen's home until six weeks ago. During that time he had gained in strength and again took up his professional work. He moved down to the Hotel Wolcott, intending to stay in New York only a short time longer to give him opportunity to take care of some business before returning to his home in Washington.

Tuesday he was taken ill with an acute attack of indigestion and Dr. Morris Carpenter was summoned and he remained with Mr. Carlisle almost constantly until death. In addition to his intestinal trouble, and the acute indigestion, which brought on his final illness, Mr. Carlisle suffered from attacks of heart trouble and also suffered from oedema of the lungs.

With him during his last hours besides the physicians were his daughter-in-law, Mrs. W. K. Carlisle, and her daughters, Mrs. Frederick L. Allen and Mrs. Louis Sherman Pitkin, the latter of New Haven; and W. Edmund Curtis, who was assistant secretary of the treasury under Carlisle and was his friend for many years.

The body will be taken today to Mr. Carlisle's home, at 1426 K street, N. W., Washington, and from there it will be taken to Covington, Ky., where the burial will be made on Wednesday.

Both of Mr. Carlisle's sons, William and Logan are dead. His grandson, John G. Carlisle Jr., is at present in Japan.

HENRY MILLER, ACTOR, HURT

Car Skids on Oil Soaked Road and Thespian Is Hurt.

Stamford, Conn., Aug. 1.—Henry Miller, the actor, lies abed in a plaster cast at his country home in North Stamford, one of his ribs being broken and his body covered with bruises from injuries of an auto accident.

Mr. Miller was driving an automobile over a country road thick with freshly smeared road oil. The car skidded and hit an obstruction. He was thrown thirty feet against a stone wall. Dr. Briggs, the attending physician, says his injuries are not serious.

In a Quandary.

The young lady sighed deeply and was almost affected to tears.

"Harold," she said, "declares that if I don't marry him he will end his life. And I am afraid he will."

She stifled a sob, then continued:

"And Randolph declares that if I don't marry him he will go into politics and become great and famous, and then he says I shall see what I have missed. And I am afraid he will keep his word too."

Overcome by emotion, she buried her face in her hands, not knowing whether to save a life or to spare the country another politician.—Exchange.

DR. CRIPPEN ARRESTED FOR CRIME

Inspector Dew Identifies Prisoners.

MISS LE NEVE IS TAKEN

Doctor Threw Warrant on Floor When He Read Charge.

BOTH ARRESTS IN KINGS NAME

Prisoners Closeted With Officer as Ship Is Off For Quebec.

Father Point, Aug. 1. — Dr. H. H. Crippen was arrested at 9 o'clock Sunday morning on the steamship Montrose, two miles off Father Point, by Provincial Detectives McCarthy and Denis, who were accompanied by Inspector Dew, of Scotland Yard, charged with murder and mutilation of Belle Elmore, his actress wife, in London. The Le Neve girl was arrested in another cabin by the Canadian police as a suspect. She was dressed as a boy. Inspector Dew identified both.

A sharp cold wind blew in from the east and with it the fog from the Atlantic. Suddenly four masts and a funnel looded up indistinctly away out on the waters. From the shadows of the wharf a skiff shot out, and lost itself in the midst. The dismal horn of the steamer hooted and the bell from the lighthouse buoy sent forth a message of guidance and assurance.

The men in the skiff rested on their oars on reaching the vessel, a rope was uncoiled neatly and the craft was of Scotland Yard, dressed in a pilot's uniform; Chief McCarthy and Ex-Chief Denis, likewise attired, as well as Francois Gandreau, the actual pilot, climbed to the deck of the Montrose. Dew's hand was extended to the captain, but his eye was passed on. "That's my man," he said quietly.

It was not hard to see that he was having a difficult time playing his rôle as pilot and itched to assert himself as an officer of the law. Capt. Kendall, McCarthy and Dew chatted at the companionway. Denis and Gaudreau turned forward to the wheel house. Dr. Stewart and Robinson were walking up the deck. Robinson passed so close to Dew that the latter could have touched him. Still not a move was made. Dew was sizing up his quarry carefully, pitilessly. There could be no mistake as Robinson coughed slightly and turned towards the captain as though to ask a question. He was perfectly unconscious of the true state of affairs.

"Captain," he said, almost jovially, tilting his grey fedora hat to the back of his head. But that was all. His face became a blank, his knees shook together and his arms went up as though to protect himself.

"I want to see you below a moment," said Dew with his choice lisp. Then turning to Chief McCarthy he said: "That's the man."

"I arrest you in the name of the king," said McCarthy. "You are my prisoner. Anything you say will be taken down in writing and may be used against you at your trial." McCarthy hustled his prisoner, not unkindly, down below. As they were descending the narrow ship's stairs Crippen said:

"Have you a warrant? What is the charge?" McCarthy produced his authorization for making the arrest given him in Quebec by Judge Angers.

Crippen grasped it before the chief could prevent him and read it and the backing greedily: "Murder and mutilation," he muttered to himself, "Oh God." He threw the warrant on the floor of the passage and continued to his cabin absolutely impassive. A few seconds later a woman's shriek told those above that the Le Neve woman had been discovered and arrested. She had recognized Dew.

When McCarthy entered he found her lying on the bed fully dressed in boys' clothing. Her lips were trembling and her face as white as death. McCarthy said afterwards he thought she would break down at once, but she recovered herself wonderfully and when Dew stepped into the cabin was quite composed.

As the pilot's boat swung away from the Montrose's side, Dew, Kendall, McCarthy and the two prisoners were closeted in the captain's cabin when the steamer left for Quebec.

Stupid Husband of a Noted Singer.

Catalani's husband, a handsome Frenchman, was even more unintellectual than his wife—he was stupid. Once, having found the pitch of the piano too high, she said after the rehearsal to her husband: "The piano is too high. Will you see that it is made lower before the concert?" When the evening came Catalani was annoyed to find that the piano had not been altered. Her husband sent for the carpenter, who declared that he had sawed off two inches from each leg, as he had been ordered to do. "Surely it can't be too high now, my dear," said the stupid husband soothing.

NEW CONFESSION REVEALS JACKPOT

Subpoenas Issued by Burke Following Conscience Story.

REPUBLICANS ARE HIT IN PROBE

Dozen Prominent Legislators and Business Men Involved in Latest Scandal—Grand Jury in Session at Capital Today.

Springfield, Ill., Aug. 1.—Subpoenas for twelve men cognizant of the details of certain large [illegible] State's Attorney Edmund Burke of Sangamon county. A fresh set of explosions in the graft scandals is expected to follow as the result of a new confession.

The explosions will cause devastation in Republican ranks this time, although in those closely allied with and almost merged in the ranks of the Lorimer Democracy.

No sessions of court were scheduled after today, when the ruling on the sufficiency of the Pemberton-Clark indictment is to be handed down, but Mr. Burke presented the situation to Judge James A. Creighton, who said that he would gladly give up his vacation to receive new graft indictments.

The information on which the new proceedings are based was obtained from a repentant Republican farmer legislator. It involves eight bills for which an aggregate of about $100,000 was deposited in the "jackpot." A few Democrats are involved, but the main trail is found among the Republicans, and it leads direct to the most influental members in the last session.

The first bill which will be taken up is one for the slaughter of which a number of Chicago business men put up $10,000. This measure, and most of the other seven, has never been brought into the graft investigation, either in Chicago or Springfield.

Mr Burke refuses to make public any definite information concerning the extent or source of his information, as the publication might cause a flight of witnesses.

The name of the confessor is promised not to be revealed until it should become necessary in court.

At least a dozen legislators and a score of leading business men are involved in the scandal. As far as it has been unraveled the new confession corroborates general suspicions and charges previously made as to who was in charge of the Republican jackpot, its collection and distribution, and slaughter or passage of bills.

The Sangamon county grand jury meets today. It had been intended to immediately adjourn it for a week or two, but it is now certain there will be no adjournment for some time.

SPANISH SITUATION INTENSE

Vatican Officials State Note of Canalejas Has Not Yet Been Recived.

Rome, Aug. 1.—Late last evening officials at the Vatican gave assurances that the note of Prime Minister Canalejas, of Spain, to the effect that the Spanish government had decided to break off negotiations with the Vatican had not been received.

Neither had any intimation been received of the recall of Marquis De Ojeda, Spanish minister to the Vatican. It was pointed out that the communication of the Spanish note to the press before it reached the Holy See proved the indelicacy of Canalejas' diplomacy. Marquis De Ojeda is still here, but is ready to leave at any moment.

Sparrowgrass.

It is stated that a well known riddle was written by a costermonger. The riddle in question is a charade and runs as follows:

My first's a little bird as 'ops;
My second's needful in 'ay crops;
My 'ole is good with mutton chops.

The answer, of course, is "sparrowgrass," which the learned Dr. Parr always insisted on using in preference to the politer "asparagus."—London Notes and Queries.

Beverly, Mass., Aug. 1.—The statue of Gen. Robert E. Lee, clothed in the uniform of the Confederacy, will be allowed a position in Statuary hall in the capitol, if this administration has anything to do about it.

Mr. Taft made public an opinion from Attorney General Wickersham in which the latter declares there is nothing in the act of congress under which the states of the Union place statues of their famous men in that hall to prevent Virginia from placing there a statue of Gen. Lee, one of her famous sons. The presideat approves the Wickersham letter.

CRIME SHOCKED COMMUNITY

Tells Story of Loneliness to Sheriff and Insisted on Taking Pictures and Locks of Hair of Her Dead Little Ones.

San Francisco, near Brentwood, Contra Costa county, has shocked that community. The woman was evidently driven insane on account of loneliness of the country. She lived in a big farm house with her husband and six children, the oldest being Chester, a boy of 14. No servant was employed.

After writing letters to her relatives telling them she was desperate through loneliness, she took five children into the kitchen and deliberately set about killing them. First she strangled little Romana, a 4-year-old girl, and then drowned her in a wash tub. Leona, 2 years old, came next. She snatched the baby from the arms of her boy and killed the child like the others. Then she seized her twin babies, 5 months old, and plunged them in the tub.

Little Chester, who vainly tried to stop his mother's dreadful work, rushed out into the yard and screamed for help. Sheriff Veale happened to be passing in an automobile and responded. He tried to resuscitate the twins, but in vain. Then he took the mother to Martinez and placed her in the county hospital.

The woman insisted on taking photographs of the children and locks of their hair with her. She cried constantly. To the sheriff Mrs. Mello told a story of loneliness.

"I've lived all alone on the ranch for six long years," Mrs. Mello said. "My husband and I own 500 acres, worth $500 an acre. Our wealth meant nothing to me. I was miserable all of the time. I knew no pleasure. I went to no theater. All I did was to work, work, work."

The sheriff is puzzled by the woman's actions. He says she tells too clear a story to be demented, although he thinks she was insane when she killed her children.

An Odd Nugget of Gold.

There have been many large and oddly shaped gold nuggets found in the United States and elsewhere, but the oddest of them all was that discovered at the Midhas mine, on Sulky gully, near Melbourne, Australia, in 1887. The nugget was flat and almost the exact counterpart in contour of a colossal human hand held open, with the exception of the thumb and forefinger, which were closed together in a manner so as to make it appear that the thumb was holding the finger in place. Its greatest length was twelve and a half inches and its greatest breadth eight inches. It was of the very purest gold, with but a little of foreign substances adhering, mostly between the "fingers," and weighed 617 ounces. It was found in the northwest main drive of the Midhas mine, 120 feet below the surface of the earth and at a spot only fifty feet from where the famous Lady Brassey nugget was discovered the year before. It weighed fifty-one pounds of pure gold.

The Roulette Ball.

That capricious little ball that decides our fortunes at the ever fascinating game of roulette at Monte Carlo occasionally flies from the skillful croupier's hand, though not often. One afternoon it slipped from its manipulator's fingers and found its way into an Englishman's coat pocket. So impressed was the Englishman that he promptly lost a couple of hundred pounds. But the little ball once found a far stranger destination than that. Escaping from the croupier's hand, it flew straight into the mouth of a German onlooker, and he was so impressed that he promptly swallowed it.—London Bystander.

John Aborn's Disappearance

A Story of Kentucky When It Was a Wilderness.

By [illegible] B. WALKER

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

One hundred years ago a young couple left Virginia, crossed the Allegheny mountains and settled in Henderson county, Ky. It was a wild country in those days, but very beautiful, nature seeming to tempt the pioneer with its virgin scenery, its immense trees, its profusion of wild flowers. And such temptation was necessary. The settler never knew at what moment the yell of the savage would break the stillness of the wilderness or when he and his family might be cut down by a tomahawk without even a whisper of warning.

John Aborn and his wife Mary journeyed to their new home down the Ohio river on the only means of inland navigation known at that time, a flatboat, and on reaching their destination went ashore, "entered" a quarter section of land, built a log cabin and proceeded to make a living by the cultivation of the soil and hunting. Children were born to them, and other families settled about them. As more room was needed their cabin was extended, and within a few years the location assumed the semblance of civilization.

Aborn brought with him to Kentucky a few slaves and bought others from time to time, for we must remember that in those days the only hands a farmer could obtain were his own negroes. The community lived on game, of which there was abundance near at hand; the grain they raised and nuts and berries, which grew plentifully on tree and bush. Each family was a unit bound together by the strongest ties.

But after a time the game was not so plentiful about the settlements on the river bank, and the hunters were obliged to go farther inland to provide meat for their families. Then it was that Mrs. Aborn's troubles commenced. In the wilderness still inhabited by the deer and the wild turkey were many dangers. Besides the Indian, there was the wolf, and there were desperadoes, who, whenever a new country is settled, on account of the absence of government find it a fine field for their lawless operations. Nevertheless every autumn John Aborn was obliged to go into the unsettled regions in order to bring back a supply of meat for the winter consumption. Sometimes he would go with a party of his neighbors, sometimes with a single friend and sometimes alone.

One October morning he set out on his annual hunting tour in company with Alexander Swift, the neighbor with whom he was most intimate. When Aborn embraced his wife and children before departing they clung to him with unusual reluctance to let him go. Whether this was due to a presentiment that evil might happen to him or that he must now go farther and remain longer than ever before, the fact remains that he and his family were loath to part. Finally, tearing himself away from them, he sprang into the wilderness with his friend.

When it came time for the husband and father's return his wife and children watched for him eagerly. He had usually been away two weeks, but on this trip he purposed to be gone three. This was because with the settling of the country he was obliged to go farther from home. He had set out on a Monday and had promised to be back on Saturday, two days before the third Monday following. All that day his wife and children watched for him, but he did not come. The next and the next day they felt sure would bring him, but he disappointed them. The wife and mother began to be troubled, but concealed her anxiety as well as she was able from her children. When another week had passed and neither Aborn nor his companion returned Mrs. Aborn felt sure that both had met with misfortune. The most reasonable supposition was that they had been killed by Indians.

A month passed, and still neither Aborn nor his companion returned. Then the other hunters of that region organized a band to go and look for the missing men. A week later they returned, reporting that they had come upon the body of Alexander Swift pierced with arrows and scalped. They had found no trace whatever of Aborn. It seemed probable that the two men had been attacked by Indians; that Swift had been killed and Aborn captured, in which event he must have met a worse fate than his companion. The rains had washed out the trail of the redskins as well as that of their captive.

The party before their return debated what report to make to Mrs. Aborn as to the probable fate of her husband and agreed that it would be best to tell her that her husband had doubtless been killed by the Indians, not mentioning that he had been first tortured.

As the Aborn family had increased the father, who at times had been troubled with insomnia, had slept in a room by himself. Mrs. Aborn, who did not relinquish all hope that he would return, kept this room always ready for him. But she kept it locked and never mentioned it or to whom it had belonged. After her husband's capture by the Indians she sold her household negroes, feeling that she could not afford to keep them, buying a strong woman who would serve all domestic purposes. To this woman the bedroom that was never opened was a mystery. She once mentioned the room to her mistress, asking why it was kept locked, but received no satisfaction. After that she speculated a great deal about the room, telling the field hands that she "'spected Missy Aborn had a ha'nt locked up in dat room." The settlers, or, rather, their wives, who knew of the closing of this room pitied the poor woman, whose husband had been doubtless tortured and burned at the stake by the savages and would never return. They assumed that she hoped her husband would come back to her and she wished him to find his room ready for his occupation.

Two years passed, during which Mrs. Aborn worked her farm as well as she could, and her neighbors on their return from their hunting expeditions always supplied her with meat for the coming winter and spring. But it was a forlorn country in which to bring up children, and she was often tempted to remove to Indiana or Ohio, where she would have facilities for giving them an education. Finally she resolved one autumn that if no tidings came from her husband during the winter she would sell her plantation and her negroes, keeping her horses, and, mounting her children and herself on them, would go to some point on the river bank opposite Ohio, cross the river and make a home in one of the villages of that state.

The winter passed without the return of her husband or any news of him. Friendly Indians came and went to and from the settlement, and the widow never failed to inquire if any of them had knowledge of a white man she described to them. But none of them could give her any news of him. In the spring she began her preparations for removal.

One night when she had put her children to bed she concluded to ride over to the house of a neighbor to whom she hoped to sell her plantation. It was a stormy night, but she was anxious to get an offer for the property and was not deterred by the weather. During the evening a band of friendly Indians came into the settlement [illegible] in search of what they could steal. One of them appeared at the kitchen, where Martha, Mrs. Aborn's maid of all work, was at work, and, turning, she saw him standing in the doorway. She was wiping a plate, which she straightway dropped on the floor, and it broke in pieces. The savage in a guttural tone peculiar to the Indian said:

"Me want bed. Me good Indian. Me no hurt anybody."

Martha got up enough courage to tell the redskin that every room but one was occupied by the children and that was locked. The Indian horrified her by walking into the kitchen, taking up a tallow dip and proceeding to examine the house. Seeing the children sound asleep in their beds, he held the candle over each one of them in turn, giving a grunt of satisfaction at the sight of their rosy faces. Martha followed him at a distance, her complexion wearing the sickly light yellow of a frightened negro. She saw him go into her mistress' bedroom, and when he came out he had a key in his hand. Going to the empty chamber, he unlocked the door and said to the woman:

"Me sleep here. You no tell."

He accompanied his words with a savage look that tied her tongue completely. She wished to tell of the Indian who had gone into the only vacant room, but did not dare. He would surely know that she had told and would tomahawk her. When her mistress returned it was evident that the negro had experienced a great scare; but, though Mrs. Aborn tried to induce her to tell what had frightened her, her efforts resulted in failure. As soon as Mrs. Aborn had gone to her room Martha went out and reported the Indian's presence in the house. But she was either not believed or those she told, considering that the group of red men who had come to the village were friendly, did not think the matter worthy of their attention, especially as the Aborn house was closed for the night.

Oblivion finally reigned over the settlement. Martha slept in one of the negro cabins and early in the morning returned to her mother's abode, dreading to find both her and her children murdered. Entering the kitchen, she went from there into the other portions of the house, and, finding everything quiet, the older children asleep in their beds and her mistress slumbering with the smaller ones, she made up her mind that the savage was less murderous than she had supposed him to be and set about getting breakfast.

Presently she heard a cry. Terrified lest the Indian, after all, was about to tomahawk her mistress, she ran out of the kitchen into a passageway. There she saw Mrs. Aborn in the arms of the Indian, whose face had lost its coppery hue during the night. Mrs. Aborn's head was hanging limp on the Indian's arm, it being evident that she had fainted. Martha, supposing it to have been from fright, sought support against the wall to avoid collapsing herself.

The Indian was none other than John Aborn. And this was his story: He and his companion huntsman had been set upon by Indians. Swift had been killed and Aborn made a prisoner. He was taken far to the south and adopted into the tribe. No opportunity had occurred for some time to return north, and even then he had been obliged to delay going to his home. Those with whom he had entered the settlement were ignorant that he was a white man, and he did not wish them to know it. He remained concealed till they had left.

London's Big Ben.

Why is the large bell in the tower of the house of parliament in London called Big Ben? The average Londoner himself seems to have no idea how it got its name. When the building was designed Sir Benjamin Hall had a great deal to do with carrying out the plans of the architects, being high commissioner of public works, and his coworkers appreciated the fact that to him the city of London was largely indebted. So when the question came up in parliament as to the name of the enormous bell that was to be hung in the tower a member shouted, "Why not call it Big Ben?" This suggestion was received with much applause as well as with roars of laughter, for Sir Benjamin was an enormous man, both in height and girth, and had often been called Big Ben. From that day on the bell whose peal every Londoner knows has been known only as Big Ben.—Harper's Weekly.

Mighty In Titles.

The ruler of Turkey, in addition to the titles sultan and kha-khan (high prince and lord of lords), also claims sovereignty over most districts, towns, cities and states in the orient, specifying each by name and setting out in each of his various titles "all the forts, citadels, purlieus and neighborhood thereof" in regular legal form. His official designation ends, "Sovereign also of diverse nations, states, peoples and races on the face of the earth." All this is in addition to his high position as "head of the faithful" and "supreme lord of all the followers of the prophet," "direct and only lieutenant on earth of Mohammed."

The Great Eastern.

The dimensions of the one time world famous Great Eastern were as follows: Length, 692 feet; width, 83 feet; depth, 60 feet; tonnage, 24,000 tons; draft when unloaded, 20 feet; when loaded, 30 feet. She had paddle wheels fifty-six feet in diameter and was also provided with a four bladed screw propeller of twenty-four feet diameter. She had accommodations for 800 first class, 2,000 second class and 1,200 third class passengers, 4,000 in all. Her speed was about eighteen miles an hour. The Great Eastern was finally broken up for old iron in the year 1889 after a checkered career of some thirty-one years.

Dust Layers

In our Tuesday issue of last week we had a short article on Dust and how to subdue it, and the various preparations that were being tried here and in Clinton.

Following closely upon this an Adrian paper told of their experments with a sprinkling of Crude oil, the only objectionable feature being a slight odor of the oil which we have also noticed here, but even this is preferable to the clouds of dust. The oil darkens the road making it less glaring while the Solway Granulated Calcium chloride is white clean and without odor. If any of these process should prove a success it would be a boon to towns where the streets are not proved and will be preferable to pavement in the resident portions.

The road oil is a petroleum product containing percentages of asphalt varying from 30 and 60 per cent.

The choice of the right oil to use is dependent upon the season of the year and the preparation of the road after the oil has been applied sufficient time should be allowed for it to penetrate the road then a thin covering of gravel or sand should be spread over the surface.

While the Calcium Chloride is a dry substance and can be applied by hand or shovel and will be completely absorbed with in less than an hour. Among the pamplets we have received is one that treats of Tarvia. This is a specialty prepared Coal tar material and is suitable for dust suppression and road construction and is best used on a road that has been well graveled and has no oder or sleine charater like oil, and is considered an economical dust-settler.

Why should the biggest little town on earth be a back number! Why not investigate and try some of these things we are tired of being on the water wagon.

FRIENDS OF THE WASTE PAPER BASKETS

Thorns To The Editor

Surely a printing office has its funny side as well as its regular work, a day one if one is only able to see the ridiculous side of life.

When the morning mail is brought in, it is a study to watch the expression that passes over the face of the Editor, as one piece after another is handled. Auto Editor hum, who's it, no good and the yawning mouth of the basket receives it. Pamplelets on every ism under the sun are sent for our consideration, a brief mention if you please, always implied if not requested, anonymous letters good and of evil report, these help fill the basket day by day.

Every candidate for every office in the United States sends little message hoping for a brief mention and if the cut of the Hon. —— could have a prominent position it would confer a favor etc, etc. Again the basket is called into requisition and receives a generous contribution. Faith and that waste basket could tell quite a curious story could it only speak.

And then the letters we receive from our many friends with suggestions for the management of the paper, notes for the sporting Editor, for the good roads department' notes for our religious page and all supposed to be dublished sooner or later.

All these things mean time and time is money and money is what we are working for, but in nearly every case mentioned, there is an absence of cash, or check. We wish to do the right thing every time but the waste basket has to embrace even these.

We wonder sometimes what people think a country newspaper can do, when the Editor-in-Chief is sporting, auto, religious and every other Editor merged under the one head. We feel "And still the wonder grew
That one small head could carry all she new."

Mr Roosevelt as a Neighbor

"The same qualities,' Mr. Roosevelt has often said in speeches during his administration, "are required to make a good president as those required to make a good neighbor." And no one at Oyster Bay can say that Mr. Roosevelt is not a good neighbor. It was his custom when his children were younger to send them each to the little rural schoolhouse known as the Cove School. It is such a village school as many of us remember—a small frame building on a brick foundation, a few wooden steps a creeper or two growing about the windows, and low-ceiled rooms within painted white. No one can help feeling pleased that the President of the nation (for he was President then) should be democratic enough to send his children to the village school. It would be easy for a campaign orator to grow maudlin over such a fact, but it is none the less pleasant for that. Both Mr. and Mrs. Roosevelt were wont to attend the exercises and prize-distributes, and to this day Mrs. Roosevelt annually contributes the Christmas tree to the Cove School.—From "Roosevelt the Husbandman," by Henry James Forman, in the American Review of Reviews for August.

RAISIN RIVER

Dr. Frank Shumway, secretary of state board of health, was in Adrian Friday at the request of the health officer G. M. B. Seager and the local board of health. He will view the river at its worst points and decide whose duty it is to attend to the matter. He will also look into several other matters where unsanitary conditions are in evidence.

Tecumseh may well feel proud over the cleanliness that is so in evidence everywhere.

LEGAL VIEW OF BROKEN HEARTS

Curious Breach of Promise Laws in Other Countries.

England is the best place—from the plaintiff's point of view—for a breach of promise action. All other countries seem to regard with grave suspicion any attempt to recover monetary compensation for the loss of a prospective husband, and unless the plaintiff has a very strong case indeed it is never worth her while to carry her grief into the law courts.

In France breach of promise cases are rare for the simple reason that the law requires the plaintiff to prove that she has suffered pecuniary loss. Now this is not an easy thing to do on the part of the lady, especially in a country where a girl without a dot—that is a marriage portion—has a poor chance of finding a husband. Holland and Austria have adopted the French system, and the result has been about the same. Breach actions are rare, the injured damsels or their relatives usually taking the law into their own hands.

Practical Germany, as might be expected, has perhaps the best method of solving this problem. When a young couple become engaged they have to go through a public betrothal ceremony that ought to knock all the shyness out of them. In the local town hall the pair declare their affection, willingness to marry, etc., ending by signing a collection of documents that apparently leave no loophole for escape.

But if either party to the contract wishes to withdraw another journey is undertaken to the town hall and another collection of documents signed, witnessed and sealed. Then the authorities determine the question of compensation—should it be claimed. In this connection it may be said that the man can, and often does, claim a solatium for his wounded feelings. The usual award is one-fifth of the marriage dowry. It is easy to understand, when all this is remembered, how loath the young people of Germany are to break their betrothal oaths.

As the law of Italy offers little or no protection whatever to jilted damsels and swains it is not surprising that the stiletto should be the favorite mode of deciding breach of promise cases. The Italian law demands that the person suing for "breach" shall produce a written promise to marry from the defendant; otherwise the action cannot proceed. This difficulty is almost insurmountable, and the Italian judges are seldom troubled to adjudicate between one time lovers.

To bring an action for breach of promise of marriage against a reigning monarch is an achievement, but it has been done, and by an English lady. It is now fifteen years since Miss Jenny Mighell sued the Sultan of Johore, and there was a doubt whether the dusky one was actually a reigning monarch and the case was allower to come into court. But the judge quickly disposed of the action by ruling it inadmissible for the reason referred to and Miss Mighell was non-suited.

It is remarkable that one of the two actions which have brought verdicts of £10,000 each to the plaintiffs should have had for its defendant the editor of a matrimonial newspaper. The second was between a well known actress and the second son of an Earl.—Tit-Bits.

HAPPINESS.

Why is it that so many people will be miserable when it is so easy to be happy?

Why is it that so many wear a frown when a smile is vastly more becoming? Everybody knows that life, as we understand it, is short, and death is sure, and all that sort of thing, but why have a perpetual fear and dread of it?

There is happiness—comparative happiness, at least—for all of us, and it is exteremely foolish to miss any of it, while others get all the joy out of life when a part of it belongs to us, at any rate. We find that for which we seek, and what's the use of taking a tallow candle when we go in search of happiness, when we may press the button of the universe and turn on the searchlight of all intelligence, and find our own.

Some folks think it is wrong to be happy, others that it is plebian, while others think a gloomy face and mysterious attitude adds to their importance in the world.

While we are in the midst of life's activities, why not take all that is coming to us? When we are transferred to the other shore we come into our inheritance.

Joy is ours in the earth life for the taking and happiness is ours by the eternal law of love. Therefore let us all be happy.—Columbus Press Post.

"The mere fact that a man is sent by his doctor to some particular baths or springs where he sees other invalids confident of a cure makes him think that he, too, can get well."

Uses of Palm Trees.

The various kinds of palm trees on the island of Ceylon are in themselves of great interest, and when their different uses are explained a person can well appreciate how essential they are to the natives in the low country Singalese districts. From the sap of the cocoanut palm the spirit he drinks is distilled; the kernel of the nut is a necessary element in his daily curry; the "milk" is the beverage offered to every visitor to his domain; his only lamp is fed from the oil; his nets for fishing are manufactured from its fibre, as is also the rope which keeps his goat or cow from going astray; while the rafters of his house, the thatch of the roof and the window blinds are made from its leaf and wood. There is, perhaps, no product in the world that is put to so many and such profitable uses as the cocoanut palm, for, even before it is grown, its leaf ribs are tied together to make brooms for sweeping and cages for birds.

An Atchison woman who has closely followed the fight of two women over an incubator baby has her nose turned up so high in contempt that her sneeze shakes the birds' nests out of the trees. "The idea of making such a fuss over a baby that weighed only a pound at birth," she says. "Every one of my children weighed at least 10 pounds, and I had 18 of them, and there was no incubator at our house, either!"—Atchison (Kan.) Globe.

BLUE RIBBON RACES

Held in Detroit August 1-5.

Recent miles on the part of trotters and pacers being prepared for their engagements in the grand circuit indicate that extreme speed will prevail in all of the races during Detroit's famous blue ribbon meeting, August 1 to 5. The Chamber of Commerce and Merchants' & the Manufactures' stakes will have to be sensatianal to a degree to furnish better sport this year than the purse events.

One of the races for developed trotters promises to make turf history. This is the 2:07 trot on August 2, in which The Harvester and Bob Douglas meet Spanish Queen. Two years ago this splendid mare won the M. & M. and clever as she then was, she is better and faster to day. Recently she trotted a mile in 2:05 on the Detroit track, one of the quarters at the rate of 1:56, so that she is fit and ready to fight it out with either of the aspirants for the stallion crown.

The three-year-olds that start in the $15,000 furturities on August 1 are reported to be in excellent shape and a wonderful race is expected, because of the inducemeut. This is the first futurity given by the Detroit Driving Club, and serves to round off the blue ribbon meeting and make it complete in every detail.

The free-for-all pace on Thursday, August 4, will introduce that wonderful gray horse, The Eel, and, fast as he is he will have to be at his very best to beat such race horses as Alleen Wilson, Darkey Hal, George Gano and Ross K.

Such events, with the unusual fields that will score in the M. & M. and Chamber of Commerce, cannot fail to keep the blue ribbon to the forefront of all meetings. Michigan people are lucky when they can see such racing within the confines of their state, and in a city where a week is as delightful as it always is in Detroit.

LADY MACCABEE SCHOOL AT ADRIAN.

Attempts were made to explain the new ratings, etc., that have been creating quite a feeling of uncertainty in the various lodges, but there is still more or less unrest manifest. The changes suggested seem to call a greater expenditure annually to the policy holders, etc. They are awaiting further details before settling down again.

A Memory of Edwin Booth.

My season with Edwin Booth was delightful. I found him one of the kindest and pleasantest men of the profession. He also possessed what I consider a great quality—simplicity of manner. Some stars have the idea that it is necessary to be haughty and inaccessible with the members of their companies. They put on airs. They like to crush their fellow actors and pose as a kind of divinity before them. —From Mme. Modjeska's "Memoirs" in Century.

A Story of Robespierre.

The story is told of Robespierre that at one time when at the height of his power a lady called upon him, beseeching him to spare her husband's life. He scornfully refused. As she turned away she happened to tread upon the paw of his pet dog. He turned upon her and asked, "Madam, have you no humanity?"

On the Safe Side.

"May I see my father's record?" asked the new student. "He was in the class of '77."

"Certainly, my boy. What for?"

"He told me when I left home not to disgrace him, sir, and I wish to see just how far I can go."—Buffalo Express.

The Advantage.

Tenant—Look here, that house I took from you is extremely damp. House Agent (blustering)—Well, don't you see the great advantage? If it gets on fire it will burn.

Grain Drills

Last week we talked about plowing. Next comes the sowing of wheat, More care should be taken in using an up-to-date grain drill. We recommend the FARMER'S FAVORITE and SUPERIOR. These two drills have stood the test of years as far as accuracy and durability are concerned. We can furnish them in either hoe, disc, plain or fert

Please remember this. The demand is greater than the supply and those who wait too long are not going to be able to secure a drill this fall. Samples are now ready for inspection.

The Tragedy of the Fly Paper

Here's a little bit of item
That I think you'll understand
You poor discouraged men folks
Who populate our land.
How to deal with your wife's mother
When she comes to visit you
And critisizes freely
Every thing you chance to do.
Just a bit of sticky paper
That they use to capture flies
With an eye to perfect fitness
And of just the proper size.
In a moment of abstraction
When the sun is in the south
Clap it suddenly but gently
On the lady's busy mouth.
It will stop the flow of language
Till you have a chance to run
Dont hesitate a moment
To witness all the fun.
But go to work serenely
And when you meet again
Smile sweetly on the lady
She from words will sure refrain.
There was once a woman tried it
And the judge said "pay a ten"
But she had the satisfaction
Which was something to her then.
And now the husbands mother
Has a home that's all her own
And the daughter sighs with pleasure
O'er the conquest she has won.

Life on Panama Canal has had one frightful drawback- malaria trouble that has brought suffering and death for thousands. "Up in a Baloon Boys" Up in a Baloon.

We were quite entertained by Mr L. C. Hayden in his description of his aerial trip and will try to jot down a few of the leading points.

At 12 o'clock noon while the various whistles of the city were calling men to their dinner the crowd in Jackson witnessed the ascent of the balloon containing as its one passenger our general townsman L. C. Hayden, so gentle was the motion that until 12:22 when they had reached an altitude of 4500 ft. did they realize that they were moving through space At 12:50 they were between Evans and Sand Lake at an altitude of 3100 feet Mr. Hayden said he located the lakes by the two islands in Evans lake which looked like mere hillocks. The drop in altitude was such that he could distinguish Putnams while in passing the scenery was something never to be forgotten, and the roads were like ribbons laid out in such perfect order and crossing at right angles the fields of grain were like pieces in a huge quilt with the roads for the seams.

At 1:20 they were southeast of Tecumseh over the Wabash train, in passing over you can imagine his surprise to see the Globe Mills and it was with no little pride that he called his companion's attention to it. They were now ot an altitude of 7000 feet. At 1:45 they were just south of Deerfield with a drop to 4750 feet.

The changes from sunshine to shad affected the motion of the baloon, it rising fast whenever the sun was shining.

At 2:17 they landed on the farm of W. C. Osborn in Whiteford Monroe township, just west of the new Catholic church 9 miles from Lake Erie and 4 1-2 miles south of Samaria Sec. 12.

Did he enjoy the trip? Well yes he remarked that money could not buy the pleasure he received and it would be a memory never to be forgotten. One could not conceive of the grandeur of nature until they had had some such experience.

SUNFLOWER PHILOSOPHY.

There are a number of things, however, it is best not to learn by experience.

During a hot summer some of the handkerchiefs carried by men look mighty tough.

Some men never settle down until the earth is carefully tamped and sodded above them.

When a man loses he says he "just plays for amusement." But he isn't amused; he is mad.

From your effort of thinking of something to say, spare a little time to think what not to say.

When a man loses his wife he says he "just plays for amusement." But he isn't amused; he is mad.

Wife is the more helpless looking than a church social before the patrons have begun to arrive?

Here is a rule that will not fail once in a hundred times: Be polite to a boy, and he'll be polite to you.

If you want to make trouble for the most envied person on earth, tell him he is seeing his happiest days.

A woman comes pretty near being an ideal wife if her dry goods bills are never as large as the bills for eating.

Nine in ten who telephone take this for granted: "I do not have to tell who I am for every one knows My Voice."

When a young man dies you hear of at least five girls he intended to marry, and who were greatly shocked at his death.

The women's idea of a "hard and unfeeling" man is one who does not look sad when some girl gets up and screeches "Home, Sweet Home."

Amateur ball players do a great deal of talking about a game after it is over. Professionals don't; after a game they try to get a little sleep.

It occasionally happens that a man tries to be nice to every woman through a desire to make a better showing of friends than his enemy.

If a man will take a frank look at his past foolishness he will go out and spread himself as a door mat before his own front door.

How careless people are! We saw a man in a store this morning buying a pair of suspenders, who said he had been trying to think of them for two years; he had needed a pair for two years, but always forgot, when down town to buy them. Is it any wonder that this sort of a creature occasionally forgets to kiss his wife before leaving the house in the morning?

A new popular wedding song is entitled "If I But Knew." Heavens, that is why the ceremony goes on; because neither one knows.—Atchison (Kan.) Globe.

Were women judged by what they cry over many more judgments would be reversed and remanded.

When a man takes his wife's advice it is usually because it coincides with what he intended to do, anyway.

It is almost as hard to give people credit for what they do as it is to give them credit for merchandise.

The woman who insists that her clothes shall mark every line of her figure should not complain if she is misjudged.

Judging by earthly experience, there will be a whole lot of dissention in heaven if the wings are not all exactly alike.

Woman's penalty for besting a man in an argument is listening to a reflection on the mental capacity of women in general.

The woman who never told a falsehood has not yet been requested to tell her neighbor what she thinks of her neighbor's new hat.

Free Sample Aids Old Men

The sudden change from years of activity of both body and mind to the quiet of later years causes the human system to undergo many changes, chief of which is in the digestive organs.

It becomes harder and harder to get the bowels to move promptly and regularly and in consequence many elderly men suffer not only from the basic trouble, constipation, but from indigestion, headache, belching, sour stomach, drowsiness after eating and similar annoyances. It is first of all necessary to keep the bowels open and then to tone the digestive muscles so as to get them to again do their work naturally. A violent cathartic or purgative is not only unnecessary but harmful, and something mild will do the work just as well.

After you have got through experimenting with salts and pills and waters of various kinds, and have become convinced that they do only temporary good at best, then try Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, a mild, gentle, pleasant-tasting laxative tonic that is especially adapted to the requirements of old people, women and children, and yet is effective enough for anybody. Your druggist, who has handled it successfully for a quarter of a century, will sell you a bottle for fifty cents or one dollar, but if you want to make a test of it before spending any money send your name and address to Dr. Caldwell and he will gladly send you a sample bottle free of charge.

This remedy is rapidly displacing all other forms of medication for the cure of stomach, liver and bowel trouble, and families like Mr. O. F. Wisher's of Sycamore, Ill., and Mrs. Carrie Culler's of 325 N. Notre Dame street, South Bend, Ind., are now never without it in the house. They have tested it and know its grand value to every member of the family.

Dr. Caldwell personally will be pleased to give you any medical advice you may desire for yourself or family pertaining to the stomach, liver or bowels absolutely free of charge. Explain your case in a letter and he will reply to you in detail. For the free sample simply send your name and address on a postal card or otherwise. For either request the doctor's address is Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 2.509 Caldwell building, Monticello, Ill.

RELATIONS-IN-LAW OF BRIDES.

Nervous Strain From the Obligation to Meet Husband's Relatives.

There have been fortunate brides, and it is to be hoped there will continue to be, who have never known the nervous strain resulting from the obligation to meet their husband's relatives. Not until their marriage became an old story did this experience come to them, if at all. Those who have gone through an ordeal in the way of such experience consider such cases extremely enviable and rare. The brides, however, who are most to be pitied are they who on their wedding tour have husbands who are daft about having their wives meet their "in-laws," of all ages and conditions, while on their wedding journey. Precious days have to be sacrificed to these "duty visits."

Brides take no such views of husbands in connection with their own blood relatives. On the contrary, they are more apt to resort to various means to shirk the request, if made, and are not at all given to pleasing their own folk by showing off the men they have chosen for their husbands. Brides look upon their own kin folk as creatures to be put off, cajoled, imposed upon and affronted in extremity. Yet, in spite of it all, there will exist a feeling of confidence in a future peace-making when they are ready to take steps toward it.

"In-laws" are quite another proposition to them. Tom or Harry's wife is, to their notion, usually a part of their property, no matter how delicately they may convey the idea or disguise it under cover of kindnesses and courtesies. Intuitively brides feel this and very soon become convinced of it. Therein lies the secret of their sudden revolts and defiances on unexpected occasions and the chip-on-the-shoulder attitude they often maintain. The "in-laws," on their part, each have a way of building up an ideal bride, whenever there is a new one on the tapis. She is expected to resemble the one they had picked out for Tom—the family idol. From the moment his wife came into their presence the process went on of fitting the bride into their visionary creation. This keeps them constantly on the alert. They scent the air for a false note and watch continually to discover her defects, while their critical faculties, newly sharpened for this examination and comparison, absorb their attention from morning until night.

How is she affected? What of her? She, too, is bent upon "in-law" investigations, but so prejudiced is she against the various members of the family, very often, that she cannot do any one of them justice. As a general thing such family criticisms, inspections and meetings are most unsatisfactory to both sides, so far as the forming of good opinions and life friendships are concerned. It will take years of character tests in the future to bring about that desired end.

Brides are also apt to fall back upon their family traditions or take up the modern coaching and assume a fixed pose on occasion where "in-laws" have to be made up to. They are very often advised, on visiting such relations, to be entirely subjective, to show but very little individuality, if they have any at all, and never to introduce family topics in conversation, or dictate, or argue, lest they tread on the family sensibilities. They are to pass over and ignore whatever may be said or done that in any way should lean toward a misunderstanding. They must be extremely amiable under all circumstances and act as if they were assured of the affection and esteem, if not positive admiration, of every member of the household.

Tom, of course, takes everything for granted and is in a continually blissful state over his bride's winning ways and the speed with which she has captivated his uncles, aunts and cousins, to the furthest remove of kinship. In the brief moments they have to themselves he tells her that she alone, in all the world, could have made such a triumph from start to finish and perfected his entire happiness. But the bride's vision is too clear not to see that she and the "in laws" are as far apart as ever; that their customs and habits would never fit into hers, nor their views of men and things ever harmonize with those she holds. At last the hour is welcomed, unconsciously in a way, when trunk packing and farewells form a prelude to departure. Tom's family were more or less hysterical in the fuss they made over the departing guests, waving handkerchiefs as they stood and gazed at the handsome motor as it was swung down the road in the far distance.

Even the woman who does not trouble trouble till trouble troubles her does not usually have long to wait after the marriage ceremony has been solemnized.

Via the savings bank lies the sure road to material prosperity; it is really remarkable how easy it is to become wealthy after one has saved the first million.

Let the Baking Board Become your BOARD of EDUCATION

The principle of all baking powder is simply this: Certain elements are combined which, when they come in contact with moisture and heat, undergo a chemical change or reaction.

This reaction causes a gas which makes the baking puff up or rise.

Now the very small part of the baking powder which remains in the food is entirely different from the original substance. And it is this remaining part that you eat, and not the original contents of the can.

For instance: In a Cream of Tartar Baking Powder—the Trust Brand—you do not eat Cream of Tartar in the baking, because the chemical reaction turns it into Rochelle Salts—an injurious drug.

So what concerns you most is what you really eat and not what you get in the can.

In Calumet Baking Powder the elements are such that the chemical change leaves no impurities in the food—it is chemically correct. Baking leavened with it contains no Tartaric Acid, Rochelle Salts, Alum, Lime or Ammonia.

Then you should use Calumet Baking Powder—and no other. It is not only more healthful but it is more reliable. Your baking will be lighter, sweeter and more delicious.

It does not cost as much as the Trust brands and is also more economical in use. It is a little higher in price than the cheap brands, but it is very much higher in quality.

Guaranteed under every pure food law—both State and National. Ask your Grocer—and insist on

Two-thirds of the native population of Uganda has been wiped out by the sleeping sickness within the past seven years.

A new variety of broom, whose exterior only is made of broomcorn, has been put on the market. The filling of the broom is hay.

The Indianapolis News has an interesting story about a man who carved his initials on the back of a soft-shell turtle. Probably he used a butter knife.

The Chinese pupil turns his back to his teacher when reciting a lesson. Which must make it a good deal easier for a skilful bluffer to get a good mark.

There are really a good many of us who are not worrying much over the alleged circulation of that counterfeit $50 bill. A plugged nickel has far more terrors.

District Attorney Balsburg, of Luzerne county, Pa., questions the right of railway companies to sell liquor on dining cars without a license from each county through which the lines pass. Seven conductors have been summoned to court charged with selling liquor contrary to law.

Church hymnals in any quantity free to any church for the asking, is the latest Chicago novelty. An enterprising advertising concern in that city is now supplying poor churches with hymn-books free of charge, the company getting its return from many pages of advertisements sprinkled through the books.

It is said that some men prospecting 150 miles or so south of Suez on the Red Sea coast have struck an oil field and that the gushers they have uncovered are increasing their output every day. If the report is true, it will be of great value not only in giving Egypt cheaper fuel but in having oil where the British navy can get it easily when in the far East.

Charles M. Dow, president of the Jamestown park commission, and a citizen who takes great interest in whatever counts for the benefit of the city, has placed in the hands of the mayor $100 to be awarded as prizes to the citizens who keep their lawns and street fronts in the most attractive condition for the ensuing year. The money is divided into two parts, one for the north side and one for the south side of the city, and the prizes in each case are to be $25, $15 and $10, as first, second and third prizes.

French scientists explain the decrease in the number of marriages in France in recent years by the statement that eligible men now insist upon a handsome dowry with a bride. One writer says that the reason why young men make the size of the dowry chief consideration is that the expensive and luxurious tastes of the modern young woman cannot be gratified on a small income. Formerly a girl who brought her husband a dowry of $20,000 was considered eligible, but today that amount is looked on as insufficient.

Many women have been greatly shocked when they took the cold social plunge.

Idle curiosity is much maligned; it is really one of the hardest-worked things in life.

Tobacco in France.

In France the consumption of tobacco is greatly on the increase. In 1908 there were consumed 19,000,000 cigars of foreign make and 577,000,000 of French manufacture. The total amount expended in smoke is given at 126,000,000 francs ($25,200,000). The Anti-Tobacco society of France is having considerable trouble with "hackers," who quote the case of Mme Snoy, who celebrated her 107th birthday recently, and maintained that the secret of her longevity lay in her pipe, which she had smoked regularly from the time she was 12 years old.

Nugget Finder Dies Poor.

The discoverer of the famous Welcome nugget has died in the Ballarat Benevolent asylum, aged 74. He returned to Ballarat three years ago poor and in ill health, and had to seek shelter in the asylum. The Welcome nugget, one of the largest pieces of natural gold in the world, was taken from Bakery Hill, Ballarat (Australia), in 1858. It was found at a depth of 180 feet. It weighed 2,217 ounces 16 dwt and sold for $52,500.

The Wrong One Answered.

A pretty and neatly dressed young woman was walking down a busy street in Kensington the other day, followed by her favorite dog.

It was market day, and the pavement being somewhat crowded caused the pup to get some distance behind his mistress. Fearing it would lose sight of her she called, "Come along, sir."

A would-be wit who was near stepped up to her and with great politeness said, "Certainly, miss."

"Ah," she exclaimed, as her pet came running up, "you have made a mistake; this is the puppy I called."—Philadelphia Times.

BOY BURNED AT STAKE

Children Playing Indian and Willie Johnson May Die.

Idea Obtained From Moving Picture Shows Emulated by Children and Playmate Seriously Burned.

Muncie, Ind., Aug. 4.—To a moving picture film in a local 5-cent theater depicting the burning of a white man at the stake, by a party of Indians, is attributed the probably fatal injury of William Johnson, the 6-year-old son of Lloyd Johnson. While the child with a company of children of his own age were playing Indian. It was decided to burn one of the number at the stake as depicted in the picture film which some of them had seen.

The choice fell on the Johnson lad and he willingly consented. Newspapers were placed under him and twined around his body and then set on fire. It was the intention of his companions to put out the fire before the boy was harmed, and they rushed valiantly to his rescue when they saw him writhing in pain, but they were too late.

GIVE 212 POOR TOTS OUTING

Logansport Business and Professional Folk Entertain Children Royally.

Logansport, Ind., Aug. 4.—Poor children of this city, numbering 212, were given an outing in the grove near Walton. The excursion consisted of a thirty-mile automobile ride, various amusements, with a big dinner in the grove. The dinner was tendered by various people of the city, who contributed money.

The Salvation Army arranged the details. The automobiles were contributed by prominent business and professional men who attended the picnic in person and toured the county with the youngsters to and from the grove.

Richmond Woman Declines Alimony When Court Orders It Paid.

Richmond, Ind., Aug. 4. — Georgia Bradway was granted a divorce from William Bradway, and $1,500 alimony in the circuit court.

Mrs. Bradway said she did not care for alimony as all she wanted was a divorce, and declined to accept it. The portion of the decree providing for this was stricken out.

Seek to Save Historic Elm.

Corydon, Ind., Aug. 4.—A movement has been started to preserve the old "constitutional elm" at Corydon, under whose spreading branches the original constitution of Indiana was adopted nearly one hundred years ago. The tree is showing evidences of decay.

The Power of Paderewski.

A hard headed business man went to hear Paderewski play, says A. E. Thomas in Success Magazine. The man is not a musician. He spends his days trying to buy cotton when it is low and sell it when it is high. This is how he described his experience at the piano recital.

"You know, I'm not easily stirred up, and I don't know anything about music. I wouldn't know whether a man was playing the piano extremely well or just fairly well. But I do know that Paderewski played one thing that afternoon that stirred me up as I never was stirred in my life. I don't remember what it was. I couldn't have told whether he was playing an hour or five minutes. All I know is that it stirred up feelings within me I had never felt before. Great waves of emotion swept over me. I wanted to shout and I wanted to cry, and when the last chord was struck I found myself on my feet waving my umbrella and shouting like a wild Indian. I went out of that hall as weak as a rag and happier than I'd been in years. I can't account for it. I've tried, but I can't explain it. Can you?"

Burglar's Besetting Sin.

The burglar's besetting sin is heedlessness. The chances are that it was heedlessness that first drove him out of honest employment and made a burglar of him. The burglar ransacks a house and carries away a spoon holder, a card tray or some other inexpensive souvenir of the occasion, and he overlooks the thousand dollar bill on the dining room table and the rope of pearls on the towel rack. This heedlessness seems to be common to the whole fraternity. We do not know what the experience of other cities is, but in Newark the burglar leaves an astonishing amount of portable wealth behind him invariably. When he reads on the day after the robbery that he took Mrs. De Stile's chafing dish and ignored her $500 ruby bracelet beside it or that he upset the Pompleys' dresser drawer to get the revolver and failed to see the government bonds that lay in plain sight on the washstand, how he much goash his teeth and hate himself for neglecting to develop his powers of attention and observation in his youth!—Newark News.

What "Garbler" Once Meant.

"Garble," "garbled," "garbler," are words which nowadays convey quite a different meaning from that which was formerly accepted. "Garble" originally signified simply "to select for a purpose." At one time there was an officer, termed "the garbler of spices," whose duty it was to visit the shops and examine the spices, ordering the destruction of all impure goods. His duties were similar to those of the inspector of the modern health department, who forbids the sale of decayed vegetables or tainted meat. The word comes from a root meaning "to sift." The impurities sifted out have in the course of generations corrupted the term till a "garbled report" is no longer a report wherefrom all uncertainty has been removed, but one that is full of misrepresentation and made misleading with deliberate intent.

Mississippi Steamboating.

The steamboat age on the Mississippi began about 1821 and flourished for fifty years. As early as 1834 the number of steamboats on the Mississippi and its tributaries is estimated at 230, and in 1842 there were 450 vessels, with a value of $25,000,000. But the golden era was from 1848 till the war. Never did the valley and steamboating prosper more than then. Thousands of bales of cotton were annually shipped to southern markets, and the wharfs of St. Louis and Memphis and Vicksburg and other large ports were stacked with piles of merchandise and lined with scores of steamers.—Travel Magazine.

Corrected.

It is the custom of a well known minister to point his sermons with either "dearly beloved brethren" or "now, my brothers." One day a lady member of his congregation took exception to this

"Why do you always preach to the gentlemen and never to the ladies?" she asked

"My dear lady," said the beaming vicar, "one embraces the other."

"But not in the church!" was the instant reply.

GRIPPEN ADMITS MURDERING WIFE

At Least Report Is Given Credence By Police Actions.

MISS LE NEVE FURNISHES CLUE

Crippen Says He and His Wife Were Quarreling and He Choked Her to Keep Her Quiet and She Died Shortly After.

Quebec, Aug 4.—From the attitude of Inspector Dew and Chief McCarthy; from the fact that Dew has said that his troubles are now over for a while and will leave for a pleasure jaunt to Niarago Falls; from the fact that he has addressed a long cablegram to Scotland Yard and above all from the fact that an official in the attorney general's office at the parliament buildings has said so, there appears to be do doubt that Crippen has confessed to the crime of murdering his wife, Belle Elmore, in London.

The manner in which the confession was obtained was as follows:

After her arrest, broken and nervous, the Le Neve woman clung to Capt. Kendall as her only solace. He had been kind to her on the voyage and she trusted him. While sitting in her cabin, once more attired in woman's clothing, she confided to the captain what she knew of the case. He turned his information over to Dew in confidence. Dew instructed one of the daughters of Mrs. Phillips, the matron of the jail to approach Miss Le Neve and without making any promises of help or freedom, to attempt to gain further information. She was successful and the information she gleaned was used by Dew to play on Crippen's weary mind.

He finally, after hours of interviewing and questioning, broke down. He claims he did not intend to commit murder. He and his wife had been fighting and bickering. He strangled her to make her keep quiet. She fainted and later died. Fearing the consequences, he made haste to cover up his deed. This story is vouched for by a government official and is the general topic of conversation at the Chateau Frontenac, and the Garrison club. Neither Dew nor any of the Canadian police officials will affirm or deny it, but there is a general feeling of relief in police circles.

Crippen is more closely guarded than ever and everything points to the fact that Crippen has confessed.

Italian Hit by Robert Taft Discharged from Hospital.

President Taft Invited to Attend Unveiling of Statue of Thomas B. Reed and May Accept It.

Beverly, Mass., Aug. 4. — Michael Grigordio, the Italian laborer, who was struck by an automobile driven by Robert Taft, son of the president, several weeks ago, has been discharged as cured from the Beverly hospital. The president paid his hospital bill.

The president saw a number of visitors. Senator Warner of Missouri, Asher C. Hinds, of Portland, now a candidate for congress; Brig. Gen. Crozier and Congressman Gillett of Massachusetts; Victor L. Mason, who had charge of the New York headquarters of the Republican national campaign committee during Mr. Taft's campaign, and John Candler Cobb, president of the National Tariff commission, were among the callers. Mr. Hinds brought a delegation from Portland with him to ask the president to make an address at Portland when the statue of the late Thomas B. Reed is unveiled there Aug. 31. The president, Mr. Hinds said, gave the delegation some encouragement.

As Consequence of His Fear, Russell Moore May Be Victim of Lockjaw.

Newcastle, Ind., Aug. 4.—Russell Moore, a 7-year-old boy, is in danger of lockjaw as the result of the accidental discharge of a gun he was handling. The charge tore the thumb, and when a physician was summoned the boy refused to have it dressed.

He was taken to a physician's office, but managed to escape, and, although overtaken before reaching home, refused to allow any one to touch the injured member. He literally went into spasms when an attempt was made to dress the injury, and it is feared lockjaw will result.

MINERS' UNION IS FACING A CRISIS

President Lewis Calls International Meeting for Aug. 11.

WALKER WANTS LEWIS DEPOSED

Action Proposed in Illinois Coal Fields by National President Is Opposed by Miners of State— Condition Is Very Critical.

Indianapolis, Aug. 4.—The calling of a special International convention by President Lewis of the United Mine Workers of America to meet in this city Aug. 11, is regarded by members of the organization here as the first step in what may prove to be the disruption of the organization. It is said that Lewis finds himself in a position where he is compelled to make terms with the operators or witness the return to work of thousands of miners and an open shop condition, and if this should occur the example would be fatal to the union.

According to persons in the organization who are cogniazat of conditions, the treasury of the union has been so depleted in the last four months that the balance is lower than it has been in ten years. The returns from assessments, special and general, have been comparatively small since April because so many men have been idle, and it is no secret in the organization that the miners have become restless and want to return to work on condition proposed by operators.

The Illinois miners are said to be the only exceptions and President Lewis does not believe they would not hold out longer if they understood the real condition in which the union has been placed by the protracted strike. Lewis is said to fear the disruption of the organization if matters continue as they are, and but for this he would not take the risk of assembling them in convention at this time.

This convention will be asked to discipline the officers of the Illinois miners. The convention will also be asked—and this plea will come from President Walker of the Illinois wing of the union—to remove President Lewis from office.

President Walker, who has arrived in Chicago, did not attend the coal operators' meeting. Instead he passed his time in conferring with independent coal operators who are said to be inclined to sign the scale for which miners have been holding out.

Mexican on Arizona Desert Sleeps Under Tarpaulin Covering Ice.

El Paso, Tex., Aug. 4.—To be frozen to death with the thermometer at 105 in the shade, was the fate of a Mexican at Maricopa, 300 miles west of here on the Arizona desert.

A carload of ice had been unloaded on the station platform and covered with a heavy tarpaulin. The man, seeking sleep and escape from the terrific heat, crawled beneath the tarpaulin, where he was found the next morning frozen stiff.

The Analysis.

BOYCOTT ON U. S. GOODS

Chinese Object to the Detention Sheds on Angel Island.

Self-Government Society of Canton Conducting Plan of China for Chinese—Ask Co-Operation.

Canton, Aug. 4.—A boycott of American goods and merchants on similar lines to the one which several years ago caused millions of dollars damage to American trade in China, has been proclaimed here in response to complaints of the treatment of Chinese in America.

The specific cause of complaint on this occasion is the objection of the Chinese of San Francisco to the detention sheds on Angel Island in San Francisco bay, which they have been endeavoring for some time to have removed to San Francisco proper in order to secure better treatment for arriving Chinese.

The boycott is proclaimed by the Chinese Self-Government Society of Canton, an organization conducting a propaganda of "China for the Chinese" and for governmental reform to which Chinese in San Francisco appealed by letter.

An appeal has been issued to Chinese abroad asking them to co-operate in the boycott.

PRESIDENT MONTT OF CHILE ARRIVES

Is On His Way to Bad Nauheim on Health Seeking Trip.

WILL VISIT PRESIDENT TAFT

Military Escort Meets Distinguished Visitor and Presidential Salute of Twenty-One Guns Fired When Vessel Enters Narrows.

New York, Aug. 4.—President Pedro Montt, of Chile, arrived here on the steamship Tagus, which he boarded at Colon. When the Tagus, displaying the Chilean flag, entered the narrows, the guns at Fort Wadsworth gave the presidential salute of twenty-one guns, and that was the introduction of reception formalities which kept President Montt very much engaged from that hour until dinner was served to him in his suite of rooms at the Plaza hotel.

The army quartermaster's boat took on board a committe designated by President Taft to receive the Chilean president. There were in the reception committee, Chandler Hale, third assistant secretary of state; Maj. Gen. William H. Carter, U. S. A., assistant chief of staff; and Capt. H. P. M. Huse, U. S. N., commandant of the Philadelphia navy yard. The army and navy officers are assigned as aides to President Montt during his stay in this country. The official reception committee was joined by Albert O. Yoasham, charge d'affaires of Chile, and John Barrett, director of the bureau of American republics at Washington. At the quarantine station the quartermaster's boat drew up alongside of the Tagus and took on board President Montt, his wife, his sister-in-law, widow of a brother of the president; Col. Bari, the president's military aide; Dr. Munich, the president's private physician; Herman Echeverria, the president's private secretary, and a private chaplain. Nearly twenty years ago Pedro Montt was Chilean minister in Washington.

A military parade to act as escort to the visiting president was drawn up at the Sixty-Second pier, but was dismissed on account of a rainstorm, and the party and escort entered autos and were rapidly driven to the Plaza hotel.

His plans, he said, during his short stay here were to rest here Thursday; Friday noon to go to Boston, remain at the Hotel Touraine there until Saturday noon and then proceed to Beverly by a government boat—the Mayflower—which President Taft had so kindly placed at his service. He would lunch with the president at Beverly and return to New York Saturday night. Sunday he would rest and on Monday probably accept President Taft's invitation to visit West Point.

The president and his party will sail on the Wilhelm Der Grosse next Tuesday and will soon be at Bad Nauheim and take the cure there. He will remain in Europe until the end of the year and then return to Chile and resume his fight for a metalic currency.

Improving Americans.

"Nothing is fixed but the certainty of change," said Goethe, and we know that the future American will represent a change. He may be taller or shorter or thinner or fatter than the American of today, but there is nothing in the existing state of society—and we use society in its broad sense—to indicate that he will not be better in many ways. Confidence in this is based largely on the evident determination of the American of today to leave our institutions and our ideals better than he found them. Every American, native or foreign born, wants his children to have a better education than it was possible for him to secure. He wants to have his children live in a community of higher standards and ideals than he has; he wants betterment in local, state and national conditions, and the result of the want will be improvement and a demand by his children for still greater improvement.—St. Paul Pioneer-Press.

- Antona -

The Story of a Strike and the Way It Was Settled.

By AGNES G. BROGAN.

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

The strike at the steel plant had lasted long. Vaughn, the assistant manager, went in his automobile to investigate the temper of the strikers. He was received by a hooting crowd. A giant Italian raised a stone and held it poised high above his head.

"Throw it, Andrea!" screamed the voices, and then down the steps of a tenement building came a flying figure—a girl whose dusky hair fell about her face as she ran.

"Andrea," she called breathlessly, "remember, Nickola!"

Unquestioningly the men made way for her as she rushed through the crowd and leaped into the automobile, then stood directly before the man whose life was threatened, protecting him with one small outstretched hand.

"Wait!" she cried. "Wait!" And then it seemed to Vaughn that a miracle happened, for the desperate mob instantly obeyed her imperious call and by a common impulse moved farther back into the roadway, leaving a clear path before.

"Andrea," the girl repeated sobbingly, "oh, Andrea!" And in silence the giant replaced his stone and followed the others.

As she stood panting, one hand pressed closely against her heart, the picture was indelibly stamped upon Vaughn's memory—the small white face with its great dark eyes.

Down the rickety stairway, clattering upon his crutches, hobbled a crippled Italian boy. "Antona!" he wailed. "Antona!"

The girl's face was transformed by a loving smile. "It's all right, Nickola," she called reassuringly. "I will be with you soon."

"And now," she asked of the waiting men, "will you let us go? This person is here for your good. Can you not trust Antona?"

As though in answer the crowd quietly dispersed, and she turned to Vaughn. "I am going to ride with you until you have passed through the dangerous section," she said. "Start at once, for their moods change quickly."

The factories and houses had been left behind when the girl again spoke. "You will be quite safe now," she told him. "Let me get out, please. I must go back."

Vaughn stopped the machine at her bidding and bent over to look into her eyes. "I am inexpressibly grateful," he said, "for the great service you have done me, while I marvel at the power you hold over those desperate men."

"I love them and do things for them all," she answered simply, "and down here in this part of the world we repay our kindnesses just as truly as we revenge our wrongs."

"You say 'we,'" the man interposed quickly, "but you are very different from the others."

"That is only because I have had the schooling and training which they have missed," she answered. "In thought and feeling I am still a woman of the people and sooner or later, as you have learned, demand payment for my kind deeds. What reward shall I claim from you, Mr. Vaughn?"

"I am eager to show my gratitude," he replied.

She stood up before him, and her glowing color deepened. "If you are sincere in that," she said quietly, "then end the strike at once."

The man looked up in dismay at this unexpected request. "You ask an impossibility," he said curtly. "I am but the junior member of the company, and even if I were willing to yield to the unreasonable demand of the men whose cause you champion there are others in power higher than myself."

The girl spoke in a low, passionate tone. "You and I both know," she said, "that they will do exactly as you advise. All has been left to your judgment. Your agents, or whatever they may be called, have not been giving you correct information regarding the origin of this strike. This time the workman's cause is just, and I will tell a few truths which it will be well for you to know."

Vaughn sat fascinated, watching her flashing eyes and impulsive gestures as she eloquently portrayed the misery and poverty in the lives of the men who had threatened him so short a time ago. Tears filled the girl's eyes. "And there is Nickola," she continued. "It was his father who would have crushed you with that great stone today. His temper when aroused is terrible. In a fit of rage he threw the baby Nickola downstairs, and that is why he must walk on crutches always. Since then Andrea's life has been one long effort to make amends to the boy, and because I try to make Nickola happier there is nothing I may ask of Andrea that he will not do. When Nickola is in want then the father turns savage and cruel. Many nights since the strike began has the boy slept and wakened hungry, for one must plan cleverly indeed to thrust charity upon these two stubborn people. Oh, promise me," she said tremulously, "that this strike may end."

Her voice thrilled him strangely. "You do not understand," Vaughn said gently, "all that is involved. We have a principle to maintain. The demand for increased wages is of no consequence."

"Then," she answered breathlessly, "if the men go back to work, apparently agreeing to all your conditions, will you later pay them what they have asked of you?"

Vaughn smiled. "We would willingly comply with that peculiar arrangement, Miss Antona," he replied, "but these people of yours have refused any compromise."

The girl stepped down into the roadway and shook her head in mock despair. "The men would be much more easily influenced than yourself, Mr. Vaughn," she said, and then he gave the desired promise and regretfully watched the little figure until a bend in the road hid her from his view.

The next day, without explanation or mention of any agreement, came the surprising news that the workmen had surrendered, and when Vaughn returned to his private office after a lengthy consultation with the senior members of the company he found a very small boy with crutches beneath his arms standing near the doorway, his mournful eyes shining out weirdly from the thin, wan face. "Iva note for Meester Vaughn," he said, with a soft Italian accent, "from Mees Antona."

The neatly folded paper contained but three words, "Remember your promise." And Vaughn replied as briefly, "I have remembered."

Through the busy days which followed the girl's face, with its wonderful dark beauty, haunted him continually, and he was possessed of an overwhelming desire to hear her voice, perhaps now in commendation, and at length he determined to visit upon the following day the crowded street near the factory. It was really necessary, he told himself, that he should learn what effect the settlement of the strike had upon the lives of the people, and Nickola could tell him where to find her.

This particular evening he had agreed to accompany Freddie White to the opera. It was very high class opera, and Vaughn was exceedingly bored until his roving eyes, glancing into an opposite box, rested unbelievingly upon the piquant, glowing face of Antona. Clad in a white silken gown with sparkling jewels at her throat, she leaned forward, listening with rapt expression to the music. Vaughn caught his friend's hand in a crushing grasp. "Who is that?" he demanded.

Freddie wheeled then his gaze followed Vaughn's. "By Jove!" he said playingly. "We all succumb sooner or later to Miss Norton's undisputed charm, but to be bowled over at the first glance, old man, is unusual."

"Who is she?" Vaughn insisted, and Freddie drew a long breath.

"Well, to be exact," he answered, "her mother is the acknowledged society leader. Her father an inexhaustible bank, while Miss Antoinette herself despises us and our superficial pleasures. We merely have rare glimpses of her. She is interested in settlement work—noble purposes and all that sort of thing. The poor and miserable of a certain section regard her as an angel upon earth, and good reason they have to do so. Pretty names they have for her. 'Little Mother' is one, and she seems to understand the queer beggars and to like them too. Hang it all, Vaughn, I'd be an Italian laborer myself to gain that girl's approval!"

But his friend did not smile. "Will you present me after the performance?" he asked eagerly, and Freddie willingly complied.

"Prepare to be snubbed, agreeable as you may consider yourself," he said by way of friendly warning. But Miss Norton was very gracious to Vaughn, and the astonished Freddie, after standing unnoticed for some time in the rear of the box, presently withdrew. Vaughn looked admiringly down into the girl's dark eyes.

"I have been trying to decide," he said, "whether I most admire a white satin gown or one blue woolen dress which has a scarlet tie."

"It all depends," she replied, "whether you prefer the beautiful things of life to the useful ones."

"A combination of the two," he said seriously, "is good indeed to see."

She smiled and turned to seek the members of her party, who, seeing her evidently engaged, had drifted away.

Vaughn laid the dainty opera cloak across her shoulders.

"The wheels of a great factory are moving again," he said slowly. "Hundreds of men leave its doors each night to go home to happier families. There is no more discontent, and it is all because of you."

The girl looked out and far beyond the moving throng. "I am so glad," she said joyously, "so glad, though until you spoke I had not thought of all that it means to so many, for I seemed only to see Andrea coming home with his great arms filled with packages. Little Nickola would meet him at the head of the stairs; then a never to be forgotten supper would be served upon the wooden table near the window, and," she added softly, "it is all because of you."

"Antona," the man whispered tenderly, "Antona!"

She laughed a little unsteadily. "Yes," she said, "you may call me by Nickola's translation of my name. It is a privilege which only you may share with him."

"You were kind enough to act as my escort upon one memorable occasion," Vaughn reminded her. "May I now return the favor?"

Miss Norton looked in the direction of her waiting friends and nodded to them with a conciliating smile, then placed her hand upon his arm. "You may if you please," she said.

Postal Saving's Bank.

We notice that progress is being made in the tasd of organizing the postal savings bank. It has been decided by the comittee to permit the use of pass books the same as savings banks generally do, and which was not at first in favor with the comittee. Expermental banks will soon be opened in several cities where various schemes will be tried out, but the postal banks proper will hardly be placed in commission before January next, and not then unless congress makes a large appropriation to cover the expense. This can be done when congress meets on December 5, in the form of an urgent deficiency bill.

Skin Troubles on Hot Days

Hot weather is hard on the skin. Perspiration irritates.

"Sleeping" eczema is brought to the surface.

Rash, disfiguring pimples, ivy poison, bites, hives, prickly heat, these itch intolerably.

Now several good remedies are available but nothing we think, that compares with the gentle wintergreen and thymol solution, known as D. D. D. Prescription. We have watched results with astonishment, the itch stopped, the skin cooled and refreshed the eruption washed away.

Will you try a 25 cent bottle of D. D. D. Prescription.

Molokai and the Lepers.

The general idea of the leper settlement on the island of Molokai is wrong, says a writer in Harpers Weekly. Instead of the entire island being used for the leper colony the settlement comprises only eight square miles out of a total area of 261 square miles. It occupies a tongue of land on the northern side of Molokai. The north, east and west shores of this tiny spit are washed by the Pacific, while on the south side rise precipitous cliffs of from 1,800 to 4,000 feet, which make the isolation seem even more hopeless than the beautiful deep blue waters of the sea ever could. The most difficult and dangerous trail, constantly manned by government guards, foils escape. If it were ever contemplated, by the land side.

THE SAYINGS AND DOINGS OF BROOKLYN TABERNACLE BIBLE STUDIES

THE CAMEL AND THE NEEDLE'S EYE.

Matthew 19:13-26.—August 7.

"Jesus said, Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not, for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven."

EN ROUTE towards Jerusalem the Master was met by mothers desiring to have his blessing upon their children. The Apostles, realizing the greatness of their Master and the importance of his time, forbade this and rebuked the mothers. When Jesus heard, he called them and said: "Suffer little children, and forbid them not to come unto me; for of such is the kingdom of heaven," and he put his hands in blessing upon their heads.

From this we are not to understand that the Kingdom of Heaven will be composed of little children. This erroneous idea has gone broadcast and such an impression respecting the Kingdom has thus resulted. On the contrary no little children can get into the Kingdom. Only those who have the hearing of faith are even "called" to the Kingdom and its glories. Our Lord's blessing upon little children merely signified his sympathy and love and his appreciation of the purity and innocence of childhood. Those who will be of the Kingdom of God must be like little children in the sense of being simple hearted, true, honest and trustful of their heavenly Father—of such like will be the inheritors of the Kingdom.

Another account tells us of Jesus' further words to the effect that all who would be his disciples must become as little children—must be like little children in guilelessness, faith, etc. But those who will be heirs of the Kingdom will all be "overcomers." Such take up their cross and follow the Lord whithersoever he leadeth. As our Lord could not have taken up his cross when he was a boy of nine, so likewise children cannot become the followers of Christ in the Scriptural sense until they have reached the age of discretion, which with some may occur much earlier than with others. We have known children of twelve years or thereabouts to give excellent evidence of faith, obedience and consecration to the Lord's will and evidence of being begotten of the holy Spirit. These, of course, but no other children, could have hope of sharing with Christ in his Millennial Kingdom.

On his journey our Lord was accosted by one who said, "Good Master, what good thing shall I do that I may have eternal life?" He had the right idea; namely, that eternal life is the grand desideratum, the grand hope of all hopes before the human family. We are glad of the question; for it brought forth the inspired answer in which everybody is interested. What is the value of the present life, except as it leads us up the passageway to eternal life? How utterly lost we should feel if assured that at death we would be blotted out forever! How little in this life would be worth consideration—how little it could do toward filling the longing of our hearts, which yearn for eternal life!

Our Lord parried the question, in order to draw out the young man and make him commit himself. "Why do you call me good?" Why do you acknowledge me as a good teacher? I am either the Messiah, as I claim, or else an impostor and far from good. Do you accept my Messiahship? If you do not, how can you call me good or acknowledge that anything could be good that does not proceed from God, the Fountain of all goodness? But answering your question: If you would enter into eternal life, keep the commandments. The young man replied, Which? The Master answered, Thou shalt do no murder, nor commit adultery, nor steal, nor bear false witness, but honor thy father and thy mother and love thy neighbor as thyself. The young man replied, "All these things have I observed from my youth. What lack I yet?"

He was a model young man and Jesus loved him. Evidently he was keeping the Jewish Law to the extent of his knowledge and ability. He thought that he was loving his neighbor as himself; but this was a mistake which the Lord disclosed to him by the following suggestion: "If thou wouldst be perfect, go sell all that thou hast and give to the poor and thou shalt have treasure in heaven" instead of on earth; sacrifice also your earthly reputation and become my follower.

Ah, how the Lord knew to put his finger on the sore spot! The young man had come to him very boastful, very sure that if any one in the world was seeking to be in harmony with the Divine arrangement he was that one. He came for the Master's approval, that he might hear him say, "You are the one exception to the rule." The Lord did not say, "If you love your neighbor as you love yourself you will at least put forth an effort to make that neighbor as comfortable as you desire to be comfortable." He was content to be very rich while some of his neighbors whom he thought he loved as he loved himself were very poor—abjectly, sorrowfully so. When Jesus discovered to him the difficulty of his situation, he grasped it at once. He saw himself as never before. It became a new test with him. Thus it is with all. A previous lesson showed us the Kingdom as a great prize, a pearl of great value, a treasure, which to possess, will cost all that we have; and this lesson points out the same fact.

Let us not make the mistake made by some, and suppose that the young man who lived so honorable a life and failed to gain heaven, would be thrust down into eternal torment because he did not sacrifice his all to become the Lord's disciple. His loss of the Kingdom was a sufficient penalty without suffering eternal torment in the future. Such members of the human family, under the blessed conditions of the Millennial Kingdom, will doubtless make very rapid progress and will obtain eternal life on the plane of human perfection, though not worthy of the Kingdom honors which belong only to the elect. And the elect are those only who are gladly sacrificing their lives and their all to gain the great prize.

Our Lord commented upon the matter to his disciples and added that the rich must have great difficulty in connection with their endeavor to enter the Kingdom. He said, sympathetically, rather than in a denunciatory manner, "It is easier for a camel to go through the needle's eye than for the rich to enter the kingdom of God." This astonished the disciples very greatly; for they knew that the majority of the religionists of their day belonged to the wealthy class, the Scribes and the Pharisees. They replied, "Who then can get into the Kingdom, if these cannot?" Our Lord's reply was, "With men this is impossible, but not with God." Men would be inclined to say that God would find no one for the Kingdom at all if he rejected the rich.

In a word, no rich man can get into the Kingdom. He must give up everything to the Lord or else be barred from a place in the Kingdom. The terms of acceptance are the same to the rich as to the poor. He who would have the "pearl of great price" must sell all that he has in order that he may obtain it. The rich must give up all to the Lord, and then as stewards of their riches will be held responsible for their stewardship.

The following little poem describes the needle's eye, or small gate beside the larger gate, through which the camels might pass into the walled city after sundown and without any of their burden. So the rich by unloading and becoming poor may have access to the Kingdom:—

THROUGH THE NEEDLE'S EYE.

"Tall was my camel and laden high,
And small the gate as a needle's eye.

"The city within was very fair,
And I and my camel would enter there.

"'You must lower your load,' the porter cried,
'You must throw away that bundle of pride.'

"This I did, but the load was great,
Far too wide for the narrow gate.

"'Now,' said the porter, 'to make it less,
Discard that hamper of selfishness.'

"I obeyed, though with much ado,
Yet still nor camel nor I got through.

"'Ah,' said the porter, 'your load must hold
Some little package of trust-in-gold.'

"The merest handful was all I had,
Yet 'Throw it away,' the porter bade.

"Then lo, a marvel! the camel tall
Shrank to the size of the portal small,

"And all my riches, a vast estate, Easily passed through the narrow gate!"

SHOOTING OF SHERIFF DULL

The shooting of Sheriff Dull of Monroe county by worthless negro tramps is a calamity which calls forth sympathy and indignation from all good citizens, regardless of color. It was a crime for which no excuse can be offered, a crime which is becoming more prevalent every year throughout Michigan and which will ere long compel our state legislature to re-enact the death penalty for malicious murder. If it will not put a stop to homicide it will at least put an end to the prepertrators, instead of crowding our big prisons with assassins who are given better food, clothing and lodgings than some of them were ever able to procure for themselves in the days when they were at large, preying upon the community.—Adrian Times.

OILED STREETS

ARE KILLING OFF THE HOUSE FLIES

Portland, Ore., Finds That Highway Dressing is a Good Germicide

Portland, July 20.—The common housefly, against which a nation wide warefare is being carried on because of his known qualities as a source of infection by typhoid fever and other malignant diseases, is becoming rare in Portland and the cause of his disapperance is due to an unexpected cause.

Miles of Portland streets outside of the hard surface paving area have been sprinkled with crude oil this season to keep down the dust. This, it seems, has answered a double purpose for it has sealed the doom of myriads of flies and mosquitoes.

About 180 miles of city streets throughout the residence districts have been treated with crude oil this season. The old type of water wagon has been relegated for streets that are oiled do not need sprinkling with water and one oiling is usually good for the whole season.

The crude oil is said to contain a small amount or carbolic acid and this, it is believed, is bringing about the destruction of the flies and mosquitoes. Crude oil is said to be one of the best germicides known and although it was not put on the streets for the purpose of wiping out the fly pest, it has accomplished this to a remarkable degree and residents of the city are jubilant over the result.

Oiling of streets to lay the dust will, in all probability, be done on a more extensive scale next year, the experiment this season having shown the sanitary value of the practice as well as effectually doing away with the dust nuisance.—Adrian Times.

OBITUARIES

MRS. J. H. DUNBAR.

Adelia Gilman Dunbar died at her home in Deerfield Tuesday, August 2, after a lingering illness of several months, dropsy at the last taking her away. She was born in Sherburn N Y and for many years was a resident here. She is survived by her husband John H. Dunbar and a son Grant of Adrian. She is the last member of her family, her father, mother, two sisters and two brothers having passed on before her. She has many friends in Tecumseh who will join in sympathy for those who are left to mourn.

MRS. J. W. COOK.

The funeral of Mrs. Jane E. Cook of Adrian was held Wednesday at the home of her daughter Mrs. J. H. Snedeker with burial in Brookside cemetary Tecumseh. Mrs. Cook was for many years a resident of Tecumseh and was of a quiet unassuming nature well loved by her many friends and neighbors who will sympathise with her children in their great sorrow.

MRS. JAMES RILEY.

Another home circle broken, another home left desolate, and another soul has passed to the rest beyond the river.

Mrs. Anna Riley has been a sufferer from disease for many months and the seeming change for the better for a few days made it all the more sad for those who are left to mourn her loss. She passed away Sunday evening, she was young to go not quite 63 years old but the call came and with a smile upon her face she left all of earths cares and sorrows, and the dear ones who loved her to wait their coming on the other shore.

MICHIGAN NEWS

Lansing, Mich., Aug. 4.—Calamity howlers over the condition of the state's treasury a year ago and who renewed the "howl" from time to time since the state passed through a stringent period, will have to shift their cry to some other source.

While the state was passing through the stringent period last year, and no one suffered very badly, not even state institutions, the wailers were seeing even worse conditions for this year and have been talking it ever since.

Indications are at the present time, unless unforseen expenses arise, that the state will not have to borrow a dollar this year and even if money has to be borrowed it will have to be a very small amount. At the present time there is considerable over $2,000,000 in the state treasury and of this sum over $1,000,000 is in the general fund.

Those in close touch with the condition of the state's strong box are very much pleased with the outlook at the present time and feel confident that the state will pass the period with flying colors. Not a dollar does the state owe, having paid what was borrowed last year.

These statements will not be satisfactory to those candidates who are running around trying to discredit their state for campaign purposes, but they have the merit of being true.

The flaws in our laws of to-day make it quite desirable to go to prison. Prisoners are treated like star boarders, silly women carry flowers and on occasins sumptuous dinners are served instead of fitting the punishment to the crime they are petted on the shoulders and called good boys and this state of affairs will continue until our laws are changed or those on the statute book enforced to the limit. Tramps and hobo's are a menace to the safety of the people, and as soon as they realize that punishment awaits them they will go to work.

GARDEN PARTY AND MUSICALE

A FINANCIAL SUCCESS--FINE PROGRAM--SCENE FROM FAIRYLAND.

Held at R. S. Moore's Thursday

The Lawn Party given by the ladies of the Baptist church last evening on the lawn of R. S. Moore was one of the prettiest ever given in Tecumseh.

The advertising for the event was certainly most unique and the advertising committee deserve much praise both for the artistic work and the thoroughness of their advertising. The grounns were like a scene from fairy-land and the passer by stopped to admire, and then went in to the entertainment

A profusion of flowers was in evidence everywhere ferns, vases and flower beds added to the scene. The pretty girls in Italian costumes making one think they were in sunny Italy acted as waitresses. Pretty girls were laden with flowers which they presented to each one on the musical program. The program was unusually fine making us very proud of our home talent.

Miss Pearl Kepple of Cleveland whose selections were so nicely rendered was appreciated by every person in the audience. The quartette of ladies and the mens quartette made a pleasing variety whose music is always enjoyed by their friends. The Garden Party was not only a success artisticly and musically but finaecially the ladies netting a little over $50. There were 246 paid admission.

The success of the concert and the large attendance reflects great credit on the ladie's of the Baptist church.

MRS. GERTRUDE HUEY RETIRED FROM ACTIVE SERVICE

Nearly 16 Years Tecumseh's Most Efficient Librarian

After nearly 17 years of faithful service which has taxed both her mental capacity to the utmost, Mrs. Gertrude Huey has retired from active service at the Library, and though disease has weakened her body, yet her mind is just as active in the work as ever.

She has been like an encyclopedia to many for she has stored up knowledge and filed away facts that have been of great benefit. After all these years before the people who have grown near to her, they must realize just how lonesome some of the hours must be to her and trust that those who can will call upon her often and keep her in touch with the outside world.

Her's has been a brave fight against fearful odds and but few people would feel that they could go to their work day by day as she has done. Her friends hope that rest and quite may do much to help her to regain a degree of health. As she thinks of all these things in her hours of loneliness may this thought cheer her

"She hath done what she could."

BOAT UPSET AT SAND LAKE

Two People Near Death, Being in Water Ten Minutes.

A. F. Robertson and wife of Adrian who are at their cottage at Sand lake were out fishing, deciding to go ty another point they lifted anchor and soon reached their distination in lowering the anchor again, Mr. Robertson lost his balance and went headlong into the water tipping the boat in such manner that Mrs. Robertson was also thrown out. With rare presence of mind they both clung to the boat. Mr. Robertson called lustily for help and some fisherman who were at Monagan Cove hearing them decided that it was something more than a mere call and hastened to their rescue. J. D. Blocher formerly of Tecumseh and who is having his vacation from work in Dayton, O. and Edward Scarf also of Dayton, soon found out the true situation and in about ten minutes had the two out of danger.

They are two very grateful people and feel but for the timely arrival of the two men they would heve been drowned.

TECUMSEH SCHOOLS

OUR NEW TEACHERS.

As everyone should be interested in our schools and in those who are to preside over the destinies and to teach the young idea how to shoot, the Herald thought it would not come amiss to jot down a few facts relative to newcomers who will be gladly welcomed into our midst.

Miss L. Loana Cowan needs no introduction as she was with us a year ago. She is to have the primary department in the East Branch.

The fifth grade, East Branch, will be presided over by Miss Joen Farley of Altmont. She is a graduate of the Normal at Ypsilanti and has had experience in grade teaching.

Miss Jennie Geddes will have charge of the North Branch and has had three years' experience in Washtenaw county. She graduated from her home school in Chelsea and has done [illegible] in Ypsilanti Normal.

Miss Mildred Connely of Adrian will teach Latin and Grammer. She is a U. of M. graduate, and has taught in the Adrian schools.

Another Adrian lady, Miss Lelia Lowe, also a graduate of the Normal, will have charge of the History department. She has taught History and English in the Grass Lake high school for four years and has done much summer work at the U. of M.

Miss Sarah Phillips of Millington, a Normal graduate, who has been assistant principal in the Millington high school for the last three years, will have Mathematics and assist in Science.

With the coming of the new school year we are confident that our schools will be in good hands and we look for a successful year in every department

The salaries for the coming year are Prof. McAlpine $1600., B. Earl Smith $850., Harriet Bishop, Lelia Lowe, Sarah Phillips, Mildred Connelly and Martha Caldwell $550., the others receiving $500.

LOOKS GOOD TO THE STOCKHOLDERS

Largest Check Ever Received in Tecumseh

The final communication received from the Anthony Fence Works, was in the form of a check that indicated a successful climax to a successful business. The Stockholders are receiving checks for 110 per cent of the par value of their stock.

This has certainly proved a good investment to many of the people of Tecumseh, they not only receiving 3 per cent semi-annually but a gain of 10 per cept on the par value of their stock. Much credit is certainly due the officers and directors, both for a successfully managed business and for the sale that means so much to the Stockholders.

It was a curiosity to us to see a check written for $200,000.00 from the American Steel and Wire Co., which was on deposit at one of our banks.

We understand that most of the money received is being left in the two banks of our own town, we feel assured that the American Steel and Wire Co., has come to stay and will help to boom Tecumseh.

A BIG FIRE

The fine buildings on the farm of Eugene Case near Sand Lake and occupied by his son Everett was totally destroyed by fire on Thursday afternoon. Everything was burned to the ground, a new barn was being build that shared the general fate. It is thought that it was a case of spontaneous combustun as the barns were full of new hay.

The buildings were covered by insurance but the loss at this season of the year cannot be computed.

The Making of Lenses.

The essential part of any device for the study of the starry millions—the suns, planets, comets and the nebulae that are perhaps new worlds in the making—is the lens or the optical train that consists of a series of lenses. It is this that makes the modern science of astronomy possible. There is absolutely no other human occupation that requires the accuracy of observation and the delicacy of touch that are requisite for the making of the finest lenses. These are the most perfect products of human hands. It may convey some idea of the labor required in the making of a large lens to say that at least one year's time is required for the grinding and polishing of a thirty inch object glass. A little lens two inches in diameter requires the unremitting care and attention of a skilled workman for two or three days. It is easy, then, to see why it is that even lenses of high class photographic work are costly. A forty inch object glass for a large telescope cannot be made in much less than four years' time, and if everything does not go just right it may require much longer than that. [illegible] Star

Free Sample Aids Old Men

The sudden change from years of activity of both body and mind to the quiet of later years causes the human system to undergo many changes, chief of which is in the digestive organs.

It becomes harder and harder to get the bowels to move promptly and regularly and in consequence many elderly men suffer not only from the basic trouble, constipation, but from indigestion, headache, belching, sour stomach, drowsiness after eating and similar annoyances. It is first of all necessary to keep the bowels open and then to tone the digestive muscles so as to get them to again do their work naturally. A violent cathartic or purgative is not only unnecessary but harmful, and something mild will do the work just as well.

After you have got through experimenting with salts and pills and waters of various kinds, and have become convinced that they do only temporary good at best, then try Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, a mild, gentle, pleasant-tasting laxative tonic that is especially adapted to the requirements of old people, women and children, and yet is effective enough for anybody. Your druggist, who has handled it successfully for a quarter of a century, will sell you a bottle for fifty cents or one dollar, but if you want to make a test of it before spending any money send your name and address to Dr. Caldwell and he will gladly send you a sample bottle free of charge.

This remedy is rapidly displacing all other forms of medication for the cure of stomach, liver and bowel trouble, and families like Mr. O. F. Wisher's of Sycamore, Ill., and Mrs. Carrie Culler's of 325 N. Notre Dame street, South Bend, Ind., are now never without it in the house. They have tested it and know its grand value to every member of the family.

Dr. Caldwell personally will be pleased to give you any medical advice you may desire for yourself or family pertaining to the stomach, liver or bowels absolutely free of charge. Explain your case in a letter and he will reply to you in detail. For the free sample simply send your name and address on a postal card or otherwise. For either request the doctor's address is Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 509 Caldwell building, Monticello, Ill.

RICE AND MUSCULAR POWER.

In Polishing the Grain It Loses Much of Its Nutritive Principles.

Rice is commonly supposed to be deficient in muscle-making qualities, and yet the Japanese, whose chief and almost only food is rice, are noted for their physical strength, and, in the later advance on Pekin outstripped the armies of Russia, Germany, England, France and America. Also, note the same marvelous energy of the Japanese in the struggle with Russia. For an explanation of these facts the Rev. H. S. Chubb, of the Philadelphia Vegetarian Society, applied recently to the agricultural department. His letter was referred to Professor S. A. Knapp, who investigated the rice industry in China, Japan and the Philippines, and the explanation proved to be very simple. The Japanese and other rice-eating nations do not polish the grain except for export. In the mills the outside coating of the rice kernel is rubbed off. The outer husk and the bran just within it are removed, and then the kernel is rubbed to remove the rough protein surface. This is called polishing, and the process not only removes one of the most nutritious substances in all cereals, but deprives the grain of about three-fourths of its flavor.

Olives and Olive Oil.

Spain's olive industry is increasing in importance. One of the leading branches is the preparation of green olives. The olives are put up in bottles or kegs. To carry out the pickling process the olives are well sorted as only those which show no faults can be kept. They are then placed for several days in cold water, which is renewed frequently. Then they are placed in a brine bath, which consists of a salt and soda solution, and are covered with the liquid. In some cases different aromatic substances are added to the bath so as to give a special flavor to the olives. Ripe or nearly ripe olives are but little in demand and are not consumed to a large extent.

Extraction of olive oil has been carried out heretofore by a primitive process, although improved machinery is now being introduced. The olives were ground up in a horse mill before pressing. The ground olives were then put in a lever press, using boiling water for the extraction. The process is a slow one and the olives need to be stored on hand for some time. They are thus likely to ferment and give an inferior quality of oil. It is estimated that there are some 3,000 or 4,000 of such primitive oil presses in use in Spain at the present time.

After the extraction the oil is placed in large earthenware jars or tin tanks and is then filtered. In some cases the air is kept from the oil by means of a layer of alcohol, which is placed on the surface. The inferior grades of oil are used in soap manufacture.

Evil of Too Many Churches.

America has too many churches. Towns which might be well administered spiritually by one clergyman or two have six, eight or ten. No one of the six or more congregations can pay for a good preacher. Few of them can pay all the cost of any preacher, however poor. Nor can any one of them pay for all the time of their spiritual leader. So only very young men are to be had, and the demands upon their time cover so wide a territory that preaching must be almost their exclusive occupation and pastoral duties be almost entirely disregarded. One of the clergymen observes tersely and justly: "No business could flourish by that method and few churches can."

Costly Locks of Hair.

There is an exchange in Paris where one may purchase locks of hair which have adorned the heads of celebrities. Two dozen grown by Lord Nelson recently sold for $625, and this was considered a rare bargain, since a much smaller number went for $350. Nobody seems to care much for the hair of the duke of Wellington, since his hirsute product is quoted at only $7.50 per lock. Napoleon, who had some that hung right in the middle of his forehead, is rated at from $5 to $100, according to demand, and Lord Byron rules fairly steady at $97.50.

It is the fashionable pose now to speak of your hundreds of dollars' gown, rich with real laces and embroideries, as "a rag of Doucet's," and not "fit to be seen." A beautiful country house, abundantly supplied with servants and kept up with all possible luxury, is just "a little box" where "we do everything so simply!" La, la. Affectation and self-consciousness of the new rich are responsible for this amiability.

If a wife has faith in her husband, the neighbors wonder how much longer it is going to take her to get her eyes opened.

You always get a chance at the man you hate; if nothing else offers, you can refuse to buy a chance when he offers his shotgun.

Persian Jests.

An exceedingly ugly man, says the Persian Joe Miller, was once in the mosque, asking pardon of Allah for his sins and praying to be delivered from the fires of hell. One who overheard his prayers said to him: "Wherefore, O friend, wouldst thou cheat hell of such a countenance? Art thou reluctant to burn up a face like that?"

Another story the Persian jester tells is that a certain person with a hideous nose was once on a time wooing a woman. Describing himself to her and trying to make an attractive picture, he said, "I am a man devoid of lightness and frivolity, and I am patient in bearing afflictions!"

"Aye," said the woman. "Wert thou not patient in bearing afflictions thou hadst never endured thy nose these forty years!"

All of which is more witty than kind.—Harper's.

Bohemians and Wedding Rings.

"Here are two wedding rings that I have just made over," said the jeweler. "They are for Bohemian women. They lost their own rings, so they had their husbands' rings cut down to fit. That is a custom in their country. Both husband and wife wear wedding rings there. If the man loses his ring he has to buy a new one, but if the woman loses hers she wears her husband's. I do a good deal of that kind of work. Other women who lose wedding rings just buy another one and say nothing about it, but these women are too conscientious for that. Usually I have to make the man's ring smaller, but once in awhile it has to be spliced to make it fit. The women are always considerably chagrined over the splicing and offer all kinds of explanations to account for their big fingers."—New York Sun.

Compared with this number, in 1900 there were 285 cities and towns in the same area having a population of 8,000 or more. It is now nearly 400 years since the first proposal was made for the Panama canal. A canal was suggested as early as 1520 by Angel Saavedra, but for a long time all such suggestions met with determined opposition from Spain, who made it a capital offense to seek or make known any improvement on the existing route from Porto Bello to Panama. More recently Louis Napoleon, when a prisoner at Ham, spent much time in considering the practicability of such a scheme. It was not, however, until the California gold rush of 18[illegible] that any accurate knowledge of the topographical conditions was obtained, and even then 30 years elapsed before the actual site was chosen by an international commission and the work begun.

The Rock of Moses.

The "Rock of Moses" lies in the wild valley at the base of Jebul Musa, the Mount of the Law, in the peninsula of Sinai. The rock is 18 or 20 feet high, slightly inclined, a rought indentation running over each side, which is intersected here and there with slits, and the stone is worn away in places as if from the effects of running water. It is beyond doubt the oldest known legendary object in the vicinity. The Koran refers to this rock more than once, and from these allusions arose the reverence of the bedouins, who hold it sacred. From the Middle Ages onward it has been visited by Christian pilgrims, who have carved rude crosses on its sides.—London Globe.

Experiments are being made in Germany with aerial torpedoes which are driven by electric motors. It is hoped eventually to control them by wireless.

A farmer standing outside his farmhouse saw a pair of pigeons fly away. Shortly afterward he heard a shot and the pigeons did not return in the course of the afternoon, as he had expected. In the evening, however, the cock pigeon returned in order to feed the young, and having done this, he again flew away. The following forenoon the same pigeon returned, helped himself to some corn strewn in the farmyard and again disappeared. Between 2 and 3 o'clock in the afternoon both pigeons returned, and it was then ascertained that the hen bird had one wing badly hurt by shot, but owing to its mate's care and perseverance it ultimately managed to return to its nest.—The Field.

Seismometers, or seismographs, as they are more generally termed, are instruments for detecting or measuring the earthquake shock or wave. Some of the modern ones are extremely delicate and sensitive, so sensitive, in fact, according to Milne, that if the solid column of masonry communicating with the rocky floor be pressed with the hand, the seismograph which rests on the masonry will be affected, and the horizontal boom or pendulum will be set in rapid vibration. If two Milne seismographs provided with horizontal pendulums be put on high buildings opposite each other on one of London's traffic streets, they will show that the tops of the building bends over slightly toward each other.

By the means of a new piece of apparatus, designed principally for the plumber's use a great deal of trench digging may be avoided. It is called a pipe-forcing jack, and by digging a ditch long enough to take the jack and start the first length of pipe it is possible to lay almost any length of service pipe. This means that the jack will save the user the expense incurred in digging the trench and refilling it when laying service or pipe lines. The jack is capable of driving pipe up to four-inch diameter, and as great a length as 280 feet of 2½ inch pipe has been forced through the ground by it.

AUTO HIT BY A TRAIN

Two Persons Killed, 5 Hurt Seriously and Others Injured.

Machine Dragged 400 Yards and Smashed Before the Train Could Be Stopped.

Birmingham, Ala., Aug. 8.—While going over the Southern railway crossing on Ninth street and Sixth avenue, in Bessemer, a suburb of Birmingham, an excursion automobile, which is operated between Bessemer and West Lake, a summer resort, was dashed into by a Selma passanger train and two people were killed, three fatally hurt, two seriously hurt and four others more or less injured.

J. H. Roden was driving the auto and he evidently did not hear the approaching train. He and Miss Keiser, 17, were both dead when reached. Miss Crenchaw, Miss Fitzpatrick, daughter of the president of the board of education of Bessemer, and Robert Black were picked up in a dangerous condition, badly maimed. Miss Crenshaw, sister of the other young woman, and Vernon Lee had broken limbs, while three children and another man were more or less injured. The auto was dragged 400 yards and smashed to pieces before the passenger train could be stopped.

CLERGY IN CONFERENCE

Church Dignitaries' Note of Reply Will Be Conciliatory.

Credit for Abandonment of Demonstration at San Sebastian Is Due to Cardinal Merry Del Val.

Rome, Aug. 8.—The congregation of cardinals which has control of ecclesiastical affairs at the Vatican, met to consider the drafting of a reply to Spain. Preceding and following the gathering, there were extended conferences between the pope and Cardinal Vives y Tuto. Of course the result was kept secret, but it is known that there has been an improvement in the relations between the Vatican and the Spanish government. As a result the reply, when it is drafted, will be conciliatory.

It was contended here that the abandonment of the San Sebastian demonstration was due directly to the influence of Cardinal Merry del Val, who directed the Spanish priests and clerical leaders to do all within their power to prevent a disturbance. It seems that the Vatican authorities came to the conclusion that an outbreak of violence would do the cause of the church more harm than good.

Merry Del Val pointed out that even if the movement succeeded in ousting the Canalejas cabinet it might become revolutionary and anti-dynastic owing to the prominence of Carlists among the leaders. Such a result is not desired by the Holy See.

BUCKEYE BRIDGE COLLAPSES

Thrasher, Engine and Three Men Fall Twelve Feet Into Creek.

Wabash, Ind., Aug. 8.—Charles Tyner, a farmer and thrasher, and two companions wet down with their traction engine and thrasher when a bridge over Buckeye creek gave way, dropping the heavy engine twelve feet.

All leaped and were only slightly injured. They barely escaped the engine, which toppled after them.

Wild Dogs of Asia.

The whole tribe of wild dogs, which in closely allied forms are to be found in the wildest jungles and woods of Asia, from the Himalayas to Ceylon and from China to the Taurus—unless the "golden wolves" of the Roman empire are now extinct in the forests of Asia Minor—show an individual and corporate courage which entitles them to a high place among the most daring of wild creatures. The "red dogs," to give them their most characteristic name, are neither large in size nor do they assemble in large packs. Those which have been from time to time measured and described seem to average some three feet in length from the nose to the root of the tail. The pack seldom numbers more than nine or ten, yet there is sufficient evidence that they are willing and able to destroy any creature that inhabits the jungle, except the adult elephant and perhaps the rhinoceros, creatures whose great size and leathery hide make them almost invulnerable to such enemies as dogs.—London Spectator.

CHICAGO IS READY FOR BIG CONCLAVE

Will Outdo in Magnificence All Previous K. T. Spectacles.

COMING IN BY THE THOUSANDS

Decorations All Completed and Hotels Ready for the Coming Hosts—Contest for the Next Convention.

Chicago, Aug. 8. — "The greatest ever! The Chicago conclave will outdo in magnificence all previous Knights Templar spectacles."

With this dual pronouncement Sir Knight William B. Mellish, right eminent deputy grand master, and Sir Knight Gorham P. Coffin, chairman of the decorations committee, set the seal of approval on the preparations that have been made for the thirty-first triennial conclave of the grand encampment of Knights Templar which began in Chicago Sunday.

"It is our boast that the decorations for the Chicago conclave will eclipse even those of the Hudson-Fulton celebration and that this year's spectacle will be the most magnificent ever held," said Chairman Coffin.

"We confidently expect that visitors will agree that the whole encampment is, without exaggeration, the greatest spectacle ever seen by the eye of man. Work on the final finishing touches is progressing as rapidly as we had planned, and everything should be in readiness Sunday for the arrival of the Templar hosts."

Sir Knight John D. Cleveland, grand commander of Illinois and chairman of the executive committee, expressed equal enthusiasm.

Templar badges and insigna were thrown out from store fronts and flag poles and appeared in show windows until downtown Chicago was a blaze of color. The finishing touches by way of festoons of lights on Templar Way have been completed. The county building will be decorated with flags and bunting from the long flag poles which workmen have been installing.

The decoration of the grand stand in Grant park has been completed. In connection with the viewing of the parade a medical corps has been established. This will consist of 150 uniformed physicians and nurses. They will be dressed in white duck with the purple cross and Templar insigna displayed on left arm and shoulder. Eleven automobiles for emergency use will be at their disposal and all medical treatment will be gratuitous.

Additional details for the entertainment of the visiting knights and their friends have been announced. A. W. Rathbun, chairman of the entertainment committee, has arranged to charter the steamboat United States for Wednesday and Thursday lake trips.

MANY ARRIVE SUNDAY

Ten Commanderies Arrive and Many More to Come Today.

Parade on Tuesday Will Be One of the Most Magnificent in the History of the City of Chicago.

Chicago, Aug. 8.—With all the splendor and pageantry of a conquering armythe hosts of the Knights Templars continue to arrive in Chicago and the task of entertaining the visitors was undertaken with all the zeal and hospitality the city could muster. Ten important commanderies were among the arrivals of the day and with their friends and families swelled the ranks of the visitors by many thousands.

Chief among these were the Coeur d'Leon commandery from Boston; the Omaha commandery and Pittsburg commandery No. 1. They were assigned to quarters in the various large down town hotels and preparations completed for the reception of the great body of Knights and visitors who will arrive today.

Twenty-five thousand Knights will participate in the grand parade and review which will be held Tuesday. More than 200,000 Knights Templar and their ladies will be entertained during the conclave, and the total number of visitors to Chicago will swell the city's population by half a million souls.

STRIKEBREAKERS ON STRIKE

Their Places Are Promptly Filled by the Former Strikers.

Battle Creek, Mich., Aug. 8.—A new and somewhat novel strike was pulled off on the Grand Trunk. The men imported as strikebreakers refused to work under a union foreman in the local yards, demanding a strikebreaker as chief or else their pay checks.

The strike was easily settled, for the places were filled within a few hours by old men who had gone out with the rest of the trainmen. For the first time in three weeks all of the former yardmen reported for duty. The Grand Trunk brought on the new trouble, to a certain extent, by refusing to furnish meals for the strikebreakers now that a settlement has been reached.

A Witty Retort.

A good story is told of two great Irishmen, the late Archbishop Plunket and Father Healy, the well known parish priest of Bray. Making their way together to Bray railroad station one morning, the priest urged that they should hurry, but the prelate's appeal to his watch convinced him that they had ample time. They arrived to see the train for Dublin disappearing. The archbishop's apologies were lavish. He pleaded that he had always had unbounded faith in his watch. "My dear Lord Plunket," was Father Healy's rejoinder, "faith won't do without the good works."—Blackwood's Magazine

HITCHCOCK CUTS DOWN P.O. DEFICIT

Railway Branch of Postal Business Shortage Still Large.

MANY SAVINGS ARE NOTED

Statement Issued Analyzes the Reduction of $11,600,000 in Last Year's Deficit and Shows Results of Business Methods.

Washington, Aug. 8. — Postmaster General Hitchcock has issued a statement analyzing the reduction of $11,600,000 in last year's postal deficit. Of the amount saved, approximately $2,900,000 represented economies in postoffice management, nearly $1,000,000 of which sum has resulted from a more business like handling of the city delivery service.

Larger savings aggregating about $2,000,000 were made in the internal management of the postoffices, including the conduct of the money order and registry systems and the handling of the various working forces other than carriers

Reorganization in the rural delivery service, the statement said, was responsible for about $1,900,000 of the saving made in the deficit and this was accomplished without any curtailment of service. The combined savings made in the cost of handling the mails in postoffices and in all branches of the service other than in railroad transportation made an aggregate reduction in the defict of $6,150,000. There was a total out of $5,450,000 in the amount of the deficiency traceable tothe railway branch of the postal business.

SPANISH TROOPS QUELL DISORDER

Cry From Separatists Club Results in Arrest of 150.

DEMONSTRATION WAS NOT HELD

Regular Troops Occupied Stragetic Points and 4,000 Were Held in Reserve, but Were Not Needed as Everything Was Quiet.

San Sebastian, Aug. 8.—Aside from the presence of an unusual number of soldiers, priests and Basque peasants on the streets, the town wore its usual Sunday appearance. There was a tremendous throng at the bull fight Sunday afternoon and the last thing that seemed to be on the minds of the spectators was the recent disturbances. The crowd apparently was interested only in the ordinary amusements of a Spanish holiday.

Over night there was a ripple of excitement, but it all came to nothing in the end. It started when the members of the Separatist club, which is known here as the Basque center, threw up a window and shouted at the crowds in the street: "Death to Spain!" Immediately the chattering crowds in the neighboring cafes sprang to their feet and for a time there was an uproar. Civil guards who are not easily excited rushed to the club, broke in the doors and arrested about 150 of the occupants of the building, including a number of priests. They all continued to shout and sing seditious songs while a section of the public looked on and cheered the business like work of the guards.

About 3,000 regular troops occupied stragetic points in the more thickly populated sections of the city, while 4,000 more were in reserve in the outskirts. Except when the main portion of them marched to mass, they were not greatly in evidence, although sentries and patrols were scattered about the streets.

Much uneasiness was felt by the public early in the day, owing to the number of strange priests and Basque peasants who thronged the streets, but when noon passed and the demonstration which had been planned failed to materialize, the people were quickly reassured.

Senor Priesto, minister of foreign affairs who is here, said concerning the situation:

"The whole agitation is really political. It has been fostered by the Carlists and Separatists, but it is confined entirely to the north. Everywhere else all is quiet and undisturbed. There is very little suggestion even of a civil war. It is never wise to be too optimistic, but we have every reason to congratulate ourselves and hope for the best."

ELEVEN BUILDINGS BURNED

Fire Starting on Sand Creek Farm Has Disastrous Results.

Adrian, Mich., Aug. 8.—A fire which broke out during the thrashing of wheat on the farm of the Roberts estate near Sand Creek, swept all the buildings on the farm and the contents, with the exception of a part of the household goods. Then it spread to the Tuttle farm adjoining and burned all the buildings there with the exception of the house.

Eleven buildings were destroyed, causing the greatest fire loss the Farmers' Mutual Insurance company ever experienced. The policies on which losses will be paid aggregate $7,250.

Charity and Prudence.

The contradictions of life are many. An observant man remarked recently that he was prowling about a certain city square when he came upon a drinking fountain which bore two conflicting inscriptions.

One, the original inscription on the fountain, was from the Bible, "And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely."

Above this hung a placard, "Please do not waste the water."—Youth's Companion.

Niles, Mich., Aug. 8.—Nicholas Raw, a teamster, was literally scalped when his team ran away. The front end board of his wagon fell down and Raw and the load of brick fell on the horses' heels. The horses in their fright trampled on Raw.

The scalp on fully half the man's head, from the forehead to the base of the skull, was torn loose. One hand was trampled on and crushed and one finger was amputated. His condition is critical.

Mansfield's Coaching.

"Richard Mansfield," said an actress who played in his company, "was a great teacher, but terribly relentless. I shall never forget a time when I was playing with him in 'The First Violin.' I could not, strive frantically as I would, do the thing he wanted. He was gentle at first, and then, persisting in my failure, he began to lash and whip and sting me with his words until I thought I should have to run away. In agony of impotent desperation I cried out:

"'I cannot! Oh, I cannot!'

"Mr. Mansfield threw up his hands in a gesture of relief, and a smile played about his lips.

"'Why,' he said sweetly, 'you're doing the very thing right now. [illegible] on earth could do it better.' At [illegible] I knew what he meant, and those [illegible] were a triumph to me all that season."—Detroit Free Press.

The Cotton Buyer

How He Traded In the South During the Civil War and Why He Quit.

By ALBERT CHITTENDEN

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

In 1862, when President Lincoln feared that the want of cotton by the English and other foreign manufacturers might lead to intervention, he issued an order to his generals to give every facility in their power to persons desiring to purchase the article and permit them to ship it on the army wagons going north empty for supplies for the troops. At the time cotton could be bought for a song in the south, and before the war closed it had risen to a dollar a pound in the northern states.

I was then young and eager to make money. Having some capital, I went down into Virginia and rode among the plantations in the neighborhood of the Union armies, buying cotton wherever I found an opportunity to get it within our lines and send it north. One day I had been out a few miles beyond the Union vedettes to a plantation where I had been told was stored a large stock of cotton. There was no enemy in that direction, and if there were I considered my vocation a shield against interference, for I was a citizen engaged in assisting the southern planters to turn their cotton into money. I bought fifty bales on condition that I could get transportation for them and rode back to the Union lines.

Something about the arrangement of the camps looked different from what I had left. Indeed, I found a great deal of difference. While I had been away the corps I had left had moved and another had taken its place. The officer of the picket post would not allow me to go where I liked, but took me to the provost marshal, Major Campbell.

I noticed that the moment the provost marshal looked at me he gave a faintly perceptible start. I told him who I was and the business I was engaged in. He listened to my story, then said he would report my case to the general commanding. He left me to do so and was going so long that, tired of waiting, I was about to mount my horse and ride away when a sentry stopped me. I asked him why he detained me, and he said that he had been ordered not to let me leave till the provost marshal returned.

Major Campbell rode up as I was talking with the sentry. He asked me to come into his tent and, getting out the army demijohn, invited me to have something. He chatted in a familiar way, seeming much interested in my cotton purchases and asking me a number of questions pertaining to the business. He told me that the general would like to see me, but was too busy to receive me till the next day.

I had left my belongings at a house a short distance in rear of the army, and when the conversation lagged I arose and said I would ride there, return in the morning and call on the general. Major Campbell said that there was no necessity for me to go away, since he would be happy to give me a cot in a tent with a subaltern officer and my meals at his mess. But I said I wished some clean linen and would prefer to go. At that he told me as politely as possible that the general had directed him to bring me to his headquarters the next day and he would not dare risk losing me.

This was equivalent to telling me that I was a temporary quasi prisoner. Nevertheless I did not think much of the matter, for if permitted to go I might find it inconvenient to return. In that event the major would be liable to censure for disobedience of orders. So I made a virtue of necessity, saying that I would be happy to accept his hospitality.

During the evening I played the army game with the major and several other officers in his tent, the army game being draw poker, with greenbacks in lieu of chips. Somehow it seemed to me that I was an object of interest. Every now and again an officer would come to the tent to look over the game. But, glancing up at these gentlemen, I invariably noticed their eyes fixed on me rather than on the cards. I was puzzled. What was there about a civilian engaged in cotton buying to interest officers of the army? However, the game interested me, and speculation of this kind did not take root in my mind. We played till midnight, when the party broke up, and I was conducted by my tent mate to my place of rest. I noticed that he kept an eye on me while I took off my outer clothing and did not take it away till I stood in my undergarments.

While going to sleep the circumstances of my detention, the interest I had excited, this watchfulness of my tent mate, altogether found a firmer lodgment in my brain. Yet as I pondered over the matter I could not think of one act sufficiently noticeable to signify anything in particular. As for my visit to the general the next day, it might be an advantage. I had expected to arrange for cotton transportation with the quartermaster. Possibly I might derive some advantages by interesting the general in what I was doing.

The next morning I waited till 11 o'clock for Major Campbell to take me to the general, when, becoming impatient, I asked him the cause of the delay. He told me that the general was busy. I inwardly cursed these military nabobs who made every one await their pleasure and were treated by their subordinates as princes of the blood, if not sovereigns. It was not till 3 in the afternoon that the major told me to mount my horse and go with him.

We found the general about to ride out on a tour of inspection, and I was invited to join him. I did so, and for awhile he kept me beside him, asking me what seemed to me a lot of stupid questions. I tried to tell him about my cotton buying, but he wouldn't listen to it. He seemed more interested in learning where I had been during the day I had come into his lines and the day before that and as far back as I could remember. Then suddenly he ceased to take any further interest in me or my whereabouts and, calling his chief of staff, waved me back with the others.

Major Campbell rode with us—why I didn't know, for he was not of the general's personal staff. Judging from his interest in me, I fancied that he might have been brought along for the purpose of entertaining me. He kept calling my attention to this feature of the position and telling me things about the number and disposition of the troops. They would not have interested me in the slightest had not his statement of the different divisions and brigades he declared were on the ground appeared much overdrawn. But why should he bother me at all with these matters and why should he desire to make it appear to me that the army was stronger than it really was? I was a citizen with no military knowledge whatever and was content that these fiery soldiers should slaughter one another ad lib provided I could make a fortune.

The general called Major Campbell to him and said something in an undertone. Then the major dropped back beside me. As he left the general the latter said loud enough to be heard:

"That plan would never do in the world. He who has eyes to see can see for himself. I'll issue the order as soon as I get back to headquarters."

I had no idea what this meant, nor did I take any interest in it. I was getting disgusted at being kept idle all this while by these autocratic military men. I wanted to get at the quartermaster, since the general took no interest in my business affairs, and secure transportation for the last lot of cotton I had bought.

But a terrible surprise was in store for me. We had no sooner got back to camp than I was placed under arrest, with two soldiers standing over me, ready to shoot me at the slightest provocation. I was not only indignant—I was frightened. No officer came near me, so that I was unable to ask any one what it all meant, except my guards, who told me that all they knew about it was that they had orders to shoot me if I made the slightest move to escape.

The first information as to my real position I received was when an officer approached me and began to read from a paper he held in his hands. I was too agitated at first to listen to or understand it, but presently I gathered from it that I was charged with being a spy and was to be tried for that offense by drumhead court martial that very evening.

Everything now gradually became plain to me. On the supposition that I had come into their lines for the purpose of gaining information the provost marshal had reported the fact to the general, leaving word that I should not be permitted to go away. The matter of my identity being suppositious, I was not to know that I was suspected until they were sure of their case. This accounted for the interest I had excited and for my tent mate watching me while I took off my clothes. He wished to know if I was armed. Then while on the tour of inspection they had thought of permitting me to go back to where I came from to report a greater force than they mustered. But the general had quashed this plan, saying, "He who has eyes to see can see for himself." The order he said he would issue was for my trial, which also meant execution.

In the evening I was taken into a large tent where a number of officers sat around a pine table lighted with candles. One of them stated that I had been lurking about their camps and had been arrested. But before being placed in proper confinement I had taken to my heels, tearing up a paper as I ran. I had escaped, but the bits of paper collected had contained drawings of their position and memoranda of the number of their troops.

An officer acted as my counsel, but as he knew no more about me than the others his defense was worthless. Unfortunately I had recently sent a lot of business papers north that would have proved my identity. As it was I was mistaken for some one they had their grip on before and who they supposed was still plying his vocation as spy under the guise of a cotton buyer.

I was condemned to be shot in an hour. Ten minutes before the time appointed for my execution an officer rode up and called out:

"We've retaken that fellow who got away last week. He's been concealed by a southerner."

The moment he looked at me he started back in astonishment.

"I'd have sworn," he said, "that I left you only a few minutes ago. You must be his twin brother."

I was not "his twin brother," but when I saw him the next morning just before he was shot I saw that his resemblance to me was remarkable.

I had had enough of cotton buying. I concluded to go north and recover from the shock I had received.

ROSEBRUGH-TAYLOR.

MARRIED—At St. Peter's Church, in the village of Tecumseh, in the morning of the 9th inst., by the Rev. Wm. M. Burton, Rector John R. Rosebrugh Esq. of this place, to Miss Julia Elizabeth, daughter of Deacon Asahel Taylor, late of this village. The parties have both of them been long and favorably know among us; and a large concourse assembled at the Church, at an early hour, (for the occasion, sufficiently attested their interest and regard.

To wish them much joy more a tame phrase but with two such kind and loving hearts as theirs, we can well assure them of it, as hand in hand togeather.

The Printer's supply of bountiful was not forgotten.

The above marriage notice was taken from the Tecumseh Herald of Nov. 4, 1852, and it will be interesting to notice the writing up of such accounts then and at the present time. The bridal array, decorations, dainty refreshments, etc., seems to have been forgotten, the cake taking the most prominent place. Now-a-days the "printer's supply of such dainties is a thing of the past.

OUR VILLAGE 60 YEARS AGO

In several issues of the Herald we have published articles describing Chicago street of the present. So many changes have taken place that have been mentioned from time to time that we thought it would be interesting to our subscribers to read an editor's, by B. L. Baxter, then owner of the Herald. This article was published Nov. 4, 1852, subject "Our Village" and gives us an idea of the place 60 years ago.

We cannot help but notice at that time there were eight dry goods stores while now there are only two. Evidently they dressed more than ate for there were only two groceries. There were were also more manufacturing plants as you will see by the article.

The Union Hall, referred to, owned by Stacy & Bills is now occupied by the Lilley Band; the Steam Engine & Foundry Works is now known as Brewers' Foundry.

From this article we judge they thought this the "Biggest Little Town on Earth," then as well as now.

There has never perhaps been a time when the prospects of a permanent prosperity for our village have seemed more flattering than at present.

The improvements now being made in it are not of that hot-house growth nor superficial character, so common in many of our western villages, but well laid and substantial, and evident ly called for, and required by the increasing demands of business and trade.

We have been reminded of this while looking at the beautiful three story brick block, now nearly completed by our enterprising fellow-citizen B. J. Bidwell Esq. upon the corner of Chicago and Evans Streets which, together with his new brick ware house, and the Union Hall, principally owned by Messrs. Stacy and Bills completes one of the prettiest block of buildings in this part of the country. All the stores in this, as well as the stores owned by Dr. M. A. Patterson, are, we are informed, already engaged, at more than renumerating rents.

The steam engine foundry and machine workshops attached, belonging to Messrs Anderson and Brewer, as also the Steam Foundry of Messrs. Morris Hyde & Co., add much to the business of the place. With eight Dry Goods stores, two Drug Stores, two heavy Hardware Stores, two well furnished ready made Clothing shops, two Cabinet shops, two Silversmith and Jewelry Stores, two meat markets and two many Groceries, two Chair Factories, two Sash Factories, two Turning Shops, two Carriagg Factories, three Flouring Mills and three Warehouses all in strong and fair competition, we are satisfied that our citizens and the surrounding community cannot, upon the whole, do as well other when in their sales and purchases as here. We have also one Axe Factory, one Fork Factory, one Tannery, one Woolen Factory, one Book store, and one Printing Office (you will excuse us in saying) need no competition to induce them to deal fairly with a hitherto indulgent public. We need in addition, a heavy Woolen Factory and a Paper Mill, for each of which there is a decided opening and are abundant surplus of hydraulic power.

But for these, if entered into at present we will have to rely upon an introduction of eastern capital, as our own business men, now identified with us, find themselves and their means too much absorbed in the different pursuits in which they are now engaged, to attempt these two so desirable enterprises by themselves, though they would lend a helping hand to any responsible capitalist who might be inclined to do so.

Our village for beauty of location is unsurpassed by any in the State, and as to the general character of its inhabitants, and its desirableness as a place of residence, it is sufficient to say that those who have once become identified with it almost always retain for it sentiments and recollections of the kindest interest and though they may be removed for a while, are exceedingly apt, after a time, to return and make it, at last, their settled and permanent home.

Most of the religious denominations are well represented here by five different churches which are uniformly supplied with stated preaching of the Word, and our Union school just taking the place of our seperate schools and Literary Institute and which now draws about $1.00 per scholar from the State fund and mill tax, as we are satisfied well calculated to meet the entire wants of our educational interests.

We will not, however, prolong these remarks but revert to this subject at another time

MICHIGAN NEWS

The entire early potato crop of southwestern Michigan, amounting to more than 1,000,000 bushels and valued at more than $1,000,000 is a total loss. Various farmers, dealers and crop experts are responsible for the above statement and say the crop was killed by the heat. The late potato crop is expected to come up to the usual standard, and, it is estimated, will amount to about 5,000,000 bushels.

BASE BALL

We see by a recent report that Saginaw baseball fan business men are contemplating the buying of the So. Michigan League franchise and players. The price which before went so high they lost track of it, is again liable to break up the deal.

The Tecumseh Independents went to Milan Friday and played that team. White of Onsted pitched for Tecumseh and the game resulted in a victory for them. Score 6 to 4. The Tecumseh club is putting up an extra good article of base ball and are winning over three fourths os the games played. They are not, however, receiving the patronage they deserve, in fact are not financially playing even. Next week Wednesday, August 17, they will play Milan on the Tecumseh diamond and it is hoped the patrons of base ball in Tecumseh will turn out to to this game and give our club the encouragement of their presence and their admission fee. They will surely get value received for their money. Turn out and help support a good independent ball team in Tecumseh.

KITCHEN SHOWER

For Miss Eolah Brown Friday Evening

A very pretty affair in the form of a lawn party and kitchen shower, was given Friday evening by Miss Maud Saul in honor of Miss Eolah Brown.

The gifts for the lady of honor were placed on a table in front of which was a large red heart, which told the fortunes of the young ladies, each guest being blind folded. When it came Miss Browns turn the heart was removed and her fortune was found in the stock of kitchen utensils,

A two course supper was next in turn and was followed by a contest on the word "matrimony". Prizes were won by Misses Marie Miller and Ina Russell.

The out of town guests were Misses Marie Celeste and Lucile Miller. The occasion was intended a surprise but the Herald being too previous, the surprise was a failure.

Hot Weather Affects the Skin.

Tender skins are bound to be affected by the increased amount of poison in the copious perspiration thrown off during hot weather. Rashes, hives, blotches, pimples, prickly heat result. Often too, serious skin troubles begin this way

To wash away the poison entirely, to clean and cool the skin, make an application of a simple solution of wintergreen with thymol, known as D. D. D. Prescription. Doctors prescribe this D. D. D. Prescription for eczema. It is sold for the purpose in dollar bottles, but we can give you for 25 cents enough D. D. D. to keep your skin fresh and clean from summer blemishes.

If there is any itch this wintergreen lotion will take it away instantly, the very second it is applied to the skin. We assure you of this for we have seen the result with D. D. D.

McCANN BROS.

A SHORT RESUME SHOWING SUCCESSFUL GROWTH OF BUSINESS IN THE PAST SEVENTEEN YEARS

Obtained by Square Dealing and Courteous Treatment of Customers

Many Improvements Now Taking Place—Getting Ready for Fall Trade

Coming here in the spring of 1893 McCann Bros. started in business in the same store they still occupy, with the postoffice in the rear of the building.

At that time they established their "One Price to All" and by their honorable and square dealing their business grew in the course of a few years, so they were compelled to occupy the whole store.

Still growing they came to the conclusion they must have more room and in the last few weeks have been painting and papering. A new floor has been put in; new clothing cabinets have been placed on the west side of the store, which not only gives the place a more attractive appearance but also more of the much needed floor space. The cabinets are to be used to hold the stock of coats, overcoats and trousers and being dust proof and almost light proof enables McCann Bros. to give their customers a suit as fresh as though just from the factory.

This firm buys their goods from the very best and most reliable wholesale houses in the country, paying spot cash for all merchandise, which enables them to sell goods cheaper than many others, with a large and up-to-date line of goods to choose from, every article sold from their store being just as represented.

Everyone is cordially invited to come and see their newly arranged store.

A Gastronomic Joy.

Of all the superb victuals which, by their great variety and unique collocation, make Maryland the Eden and Arcadia of every man who loves good eating, the planked shad is probably the most powerful and poignant in its appeal to the senses. The wild duck, though it sets the palate to vibrating like an aeolian harp, has no thrill for the eye. It is a small and unlovely bird of a dull color and ungraceful outline. So, too, the diamond back terrapin. It has no more beauty in death than a plate of soup. And certain other exquisite delicatessen, for all their sweetness, do not soothe the sense of smell. Of such are the raw oyster, the boiled hard crab and the Magothy river cabbage. But the planked shad—ah, here we come to a delicacy which enchants us alike through the eyes, the palate and the nose! As it comes upon the table it has the imperial dignity of a Charlemagne. Its noble head moves one to reverence; the epicy bold curve of its tail is like the curl of a great comber upon a coral beach. And it radiates a perfume as of Araby.—Baltimore Sun.

Water Under Deserts.

Some of the most curious phenomena of the world are the underground water supplies beneath deserts. In the Rajputana deserts water is held in vast quantities in sandstone beds under the scorched surface and is drawn up from wells sunk into the strata. Bikaner raises its walls in the midst of a weary, almost rainless waste of sand and depends on these hidden cisterns for its very existence. Whence it comes, where is the outfall and what quantity runs under the baked sand remain a mystery. In one well at Bikaner it has been ascertained that the water supply is equal to 20,000 gallons an hour, which is held to point to the conclusion that there is an enormous subterranean flow and that the snow fed rivers of the Himalayas must be the source. People in Bikaner say that pieces of wood dropped into one well have come up in another. The idea of an underground river opens up a wide range of possibilities for the imagination.

Free Sample Aids Old Men

The sudden change from years of activity of both body and mind to the quiet of later years causes the human system to undergo many changes, chief of which is in the digestive organs.

It becomes harder and harder to get the bowels to move promptly and regularly and in consequence many elderly men suffer not only from the basic trouble, constipation, but from indigestion, headache, belching, sour stomach, drowsiness after eating and similar annoyances. It is first of all necessary to keep the bowels open and then to tone the digestive muscles so as to get them to again do their work naturally. A violent cathartic or purgative is not only unnecessary but harmful, and something mild will do the work just as well.

After you have got through experimenting with salts and pills and waters of various kinds, and have become convinced that they do only temporary good at best, then try Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, a mild, gentle, pleasant-tasting laxative tonic that is especially adapted to the requirements of old people, women and children, and yet is effective enough for anybody. Your druggist, who has handled it successfully for a quarter of a century, will sell you a bottle for fifty cents or one dollar, but if you want to make a test of it before spending any money send your name and address to Dr. Caldwell and he will gladly send you a sample bottle free of charge.

This remedy is rapidly displacing all other forms of medication for the cure of stomach, liver and bowel trouble, and families like Mr. O. F. Wisher's of Sycamore, Ill., and Mrs. Carrie Culler's of 325 N. Notre Dame street, South Bend, Ind., are now never without it in the house. They have tested it and know its grand value to every member of the family.

Dr. Caldwell personally will be pleased to give you any medical advice you may desire for yourself or family pertaining to the stomach, liver or bowels absolutely free of charge. Explain your case in a letter and he will reply to you in detail. For the free sample simply send your name and address on a postal card or otherwise. For either request the doctor's address is Dr. W. B. Caldwell, R.509 Caldwell building, Monticello, Ill.

PARADISE FOR BIRDS.

Barren Puffin Island off the West Coast of Great Britain.

Gaunt and bare Puffin Island rises boldly from the sea at the most easterly point of Anglesey. Its sides torn and discolored by the waves offer scant welcome to the explorer, but there are several places at which a landing may be made from a small boat.

Naturalists will not object to the forbidding appearance of this half mile length of rock at which the timid look askance. Neglected of man it is the chosen home of thousands, and thousands of birds who share its solitude with a few sheep and scores of rabbits. Puffin Island has more than one name. The Welsh call it Ynys Seirol, or the Island of St. Seirol, who had a hermitage here far away in the sixth century and it is also known as Priestholme (the priest's island.)

Perched in the centre of the isle are the ruins of a tower, built in the seventh century. But this scanty spot upon the waters should be named the home of the birds. In myriads they seek it to breed. The keepers of the lighthouse are almost the only human beings they see; they can live their happy lives without the shadow of man to frighten them.

Most in numbers is the puffin—being in the majority it has given its name to the place. This curious looking bird, so ungainly on land rides on the waves wonderfully and dives as surely no other bird can. Come upon it suddenly—it plunges deep into the water and your boat has gone a long distance ahead before it comes to the surface again. In some places the puffin is called the sea parrot and in appearance it is not unlike pretty poll.

Stormy petrels find a resting place in this grim retreat; gulls are common; razor bills, cormorants, curlews and divers add to the population. Gannets have been met with and the peregrine falcon. Among these rare specimens the pigeon excites no remark.

Exceedingly curious is the clamor made by these creatures during the breeding time. One might imagine one's self in the House of Commons during a "scene" in which wild words and incoherent sentences are hurled about. Only there is no Speaker to quell the tumult and restore order.—London Evening Standard.

Liner and Locomotive.

The great Cunard turbine steamers continue to give evidence of a capacity for speed which has not as yet been fully demonstrated. The Mauretania, in reducing the time between Daunt's Rock and the Ambrose Channel Lightship to 4 days 11 hours and 35 minutes, has cut nearly seven hours from her time for the trip of May 11, more than 5 hours from her record of May 21, and nearly three hours from her voyage of August 20.

What may not be expected from a continuous performance in time-clipping which gives the great liner a new speed record for nearly every trip? A four-day voyage is well within the possibilities when the fast sister greyhounds are fully unleashed.

In effect they have already brought London almost as near to New York in postal time as are the cities of the Pacific coast. A letter mailed in New York requires four days and nine hours to reach San Francisco; it requires less than a day longer to reach London. Taking for comparison the distance by rail between Buffalo and Los Angeles, which approximately represents in mileage the route from Ambrose Channel to Daunt's Rock, a passenger leaving the former city by a morning train on Saturday and catching the Overland Limited at Omaha on Sunday would not reach his destination until Wednesday morning—a journey of four days.

That any time comparison between transcontinental railway and ocean journeys should be possible illustrates the extent to which the liner has encroached on the locomotive's province in the matter of speed. Given a four-day boat, it will be necessary for railroad managers to reduce their schedules of long-distance runs if the locomotive is to retain its prestige.—New York World.

As soon as a woman gets married it begins to show in the knot of hair on the back of her head. We can look at the knot of hair on the back of a woman's head and tell whether she is married or single.

When a woman has been married as long as two years, and none of his folks come to visit her, the suspicion is confirmed that they don't match up with her ante-wedding tales of their wealth and greatness.

LUXURIOUS SLEEPING CARS.

Those in India to Have Bathrooms and Other Conveniences.

The latest sleeping cars in India are fitted luxuriously. Like most foreign cars they are divided into compartments, but a corridor runs from end to end of the car. Each compartment contains two berths. The upper berth is of peculiarly ingenious design, so compactly constructed that a casual observer would fail to see how it can be lowered.

The compartments are large enough to accommodate the luggage that any two persons can require, and are fitted up with all kinds of conveniences. Every compartment has an electric fan under the control of the passengers, and of the three electric lamps one is a small night lamp that can be kept burning all night without inconvenience.

If a party is too large for a single compartment, says the Railroad Man's Magazine, a sliding door connecting with the adjoining compartment can be thrown open. On the other hand, if the passenger desires he can lock his door, pull down his Venetian blinds and be secure from intrusion.

At each end of the coach is a roomy bathroom, with a large bath half sunk in the floor, the walls lined with mirrors, and equipped with every imaginable sanitary device. There is also a servant's compartment. It is said that this coach has been approved by the railway board as the standard type for India rolling stock.

A MAN'S ESTIMATE.

A party of ladies and gentlemen were at dinner.

"I understand," said Austin Hammond, "that Ned Hargraves has become engaged while I have been away."

"Yes," said one of the ladies, "and he is throwing himself away."

"In the opinion of the men or the women?"

"I never speak in praise or condemnation of another," replied the lady, "except for myself alone."

"And, without referring to you at all, I must say that I never take a woman's opinion of another woman."

"Why so?" asked several ladies at once.

"A woman is influenced in her likes and dislikes. She has no sense of real justice."

"And would you rely on a man's opinion of a woman?"

"A man of mature age."

"Yourself, for instance?"

"I am forty; too old to be caught by sentiment, too young to be fooled as an old man."

This bit of conversation took place when the ladies at dinners were accustomed to leave the men to smoke with their coffee, and the hostess led them to the drawing room, where they spent an hour conversing on the topic of the relative value of a man's and a woman's opinion of women.

It was about a week later that Austin Hammond received an invitation from one of the party informally for a game of whist. He met there a widow, Mrs Cheever, somewhere between twenty-two and twenty-five years old. She was modest and shy, almost to timidity. Nevertheless there was something about her that grew upon Hammond. It was not her conversation, for she was not a talker. It might have been her eyes, set in a small oval shaped head. At any rate, there was something away down in those eyes to excite a man's fancy and set him wondering.

Hammond asked permission to call and became a frequent visitor at her home, a suite of apartments in which she lived with a servant. He took her out occasionally either to drive or to places of amusement, and it was not long before his friends began to speculate upon a probable engagement. One morning he was surprised to receive a note from the lady who introduced him to Mrs. Cheever in which she said substantially that, having heard of his attentions, she wished to disclaim any intention to recommend the lady she had introduced as a suitable person for him to marry. If he made a match with Mrs. Cheever he must do so on his own responsibility.

Later on he received a second note from another of the ladies he had met at the dinner party. This note was a positive warning against Mrs. Cheever. Hammond kept the note a secret for two days, then showed it to the woman it condemned. She looked troubled, but told a very straight story which agreed especially with Hammond's opinions in matters between women.

Hammond at last found the young widow so necessary to him that he asked her to be his wife. She declined at first; giving as her reason that she would bring him nothing; indeed, could not make a respectable show at the wedding. Hammond told her that he could support her comfortably and gave her a check for $1,000 to spend on a trosseau. This, after many protestations, she finally consented to accept, and the matter was settled. The final closing of the arrangements occurred at 11 o'clock one night. Hammond left his fiancee a happy man.

The next evening at 8 he went to the lady's apartments to consult with her as to her preference in the matter of an engagement ring. There was no reply to his ring at the door. Convinced that there was no one within, he applied for information at the office of the janitor.

"The lady moved out this morning, sir."

Hammond caught at the banister for support.

"Did she leave any message for—for me?"

"She left no message for any one, sir. While her things were going into the van she went round to the bank, came back and paid three months' rent and went away."

That was the last of Mrs. Cheever for Hammond.

He did not inquire at his bank if his $1,000 check had been presented, but he found it was charged against him when his account was balanced. He kept away from his friends as much as possible and when rallied with queries as to when he was going to be married turned away with a sickly expression, replying that he might possibly marry a marble statue or a wooden Indian squaw with a bundle of cigars in her hand, but never a woman.

One morning at breakfast he opened a note from the lady who had introduced him to Mrs. Cheever, apologizing for her part in the plot that had been concocted by the ladies of the dinner party in which he had expressed his views of women's testimony with regard to women. One of the women of the party said she knew a woman of twenty-three who had divorced three husbands and had one or two left who would be a good subject for Hammond to test the value of his judgment of women upon. The ladies were all aghast at the serious results of their conspiracy.—Eugenia A. Maxey.

PERSONS OF MANY NAMES.

Farmer Lad with a Name for Every Letter in the Alphabet.

One cannot help sympathizing with Lieut. Tollemache, who after groaning for many years under the burden of seven Christian names containing no fewer than sixty letters has at last decided to jettison five of them and to be known for the future as plain "Leo de Orellana Tollemache," a designation long enough surely to satisfy any reasonable man.

And yet the gallant Lieutenant was an enviable person compared with the other members of his many named family, nine of whom share 103 Christian names among them, ranging in number from ten to seventeen, the latter number being the baptismal dower of one of his sisters, who if ever she has time to sign her full name must write "Lyona, Decima Veronica Eayth Undine Cyssa Hylda Rowena Viola Adela Thyra Ursula Ysabel Blanche Lelias Dysart Plantagenet Tollemache."

After such an autograph as this one turns with relief to the royal signature of the Empress Dowager of China, which contains but a paltry fifty nine letters, or to that of a native of Hawaii, who is content with fifty-one letters, eight of which are k's and fifteen a's.

That a multiplicity of names is not the prerogative of the higher classes was proved a few years ago when the infant boy of a Buckinghamshire farmer was presented at the font with twenty-six Christian names, each beginning with a different letter of the alphabet, from Abel to Yariah and Zachariah, and when a farm laborer handed a list of twenty-one names to the vicar of a church near Tunbridge Wells as the dower of his baby boy. Fortunately for the child the father was induced to cut down the allowance to half a dozen. Even thus we can image that in future years that boy will look with envy on the offspring of a Mr. Penny, who labelled his children One Penny, Two Penny and so on, up to the full shilling's worth of pennies.

The absurdities of Christian names are illustrated in a Sussex jury list of the seventeenth century which may be seen in the British Museum. Among the jurors of that time were Safety-on-High Snat of Uckfield, Kill-Sin Pemble of Westham; Fight-the-Good Fight-of-Faith White, Small-Hope Biggs, Faint-Not Hirst and Earth Adams, although after all the names are no more remarkable than those given a few months ago to twin infants in the Midlands, who will go through life as Faith Hope Charity Rogers and Pentateuch Rogers.—Tit Bits.

Oldest Land in the World.

Stretching across Canada, north of the St. Lawrence, and ending in the regions about the source of the Mississippi, is a range of low granite hills called the Laurentian Highlands. These hills are really mountains that are almost worn out, for they are the oldest land in America, and, according to Agassiz, the oldest in the world. In the days when there was nothing but water on the face of the globe these mountains came up—a long island of primitive rock with universal ocean chafing against its shores. None of the other continents had put in their appearance at the time America was thus looking up. The United States began to come to light by the gradual uplifting of this land to the north and the appearance of the tops of the Alleghenies, which were the next in order. Later the Rockies started up. The United States grew southward from Wisconsin and westward from the Blue Ridge. An early view of the country would have showed a large island which is now northern Wisconsin, and a long thin tongue of this primitive rock sticking down from Canada into Minnesota, and these two growing states looking out over the waters at the mere beginnings of mountain ranges east and west. They were waiting for the rest of the United States to appear.—Chas. D. Stewart in the Atlantic.

Carefully Guarded Trade Secret.

Among the finest and most distinctive varieties of textile fabrics are the cloths technically known as quiltings, which, however, have nothing to do with bed quilts, but include such fabrics as piques, diamonds, mattings and materials for gentlemen's light waistcoats.

The important processes in the manufacture of quiltings are zealously guarded as trade secrets. They represent the finest achievements in cotton cloth.

The extreme delicacy of their manufacture may be gathered from the fact that down to even twenty-five years ago they were still largely made on the hand loom, the work being done not in mills but given out to the workers in their own homes. By constant experiment and after many failures a quilting loom was constructed, especially at Bury, England, which came to be the centre for the making of quiltings.

How a Monkey Pleaded.

In Barbados the monkeys frequently injure the sugar cane. As a general thing, however, they are inoffensive creatures and the average planter regards them with good-natured tolerance. Once in a while, however, they commit a little too much damage on the growing cane, and an example has to be made of one poor culprit by shooting a member of any particular troop of monkeys that may be found near the scene of destruction. Exposing the dead body as a warning is usually sufficient, and the cane is no longer attacked.

On one accasion great damage had been perpetrated, and the planter—Clarence Agard, now residing in St. Lucy, Barbadoes—went out with his gun to act as executioner. He succeeded in isolating one stray simian in a tree that was detached from all adjacent shrubbery. The poor animal, realizing that it was trapped, rushed up to the utmost end of the branch, and then looked in the most appealing manner at the man below. The latter finally raised his gun, and was on the point of pressing the trigger when the monkey suddenly took a little infantile replica of itself from its back and held it out in the most supplicating way conceivable.

The planter, who is fond of animals, had his heart quite touched, and he promptly lowered his gun. A companion, however, in his endeavor to see what else the poor simian would do, raised his gun, and apparently once more its life was in danger. Then ensued a most striking exhibition of animal reasoning. The monkey at once grasped the fact that her first claim for consideration had apparently failed, and the only reason her intelligence could suggest for the failure was that the infant simian was not regarded as her own genuine offspring.

"What was to be done? How could she convince these two human brutes that she really was a sad and distressed mother? A happy thought occurred to her. She plucked a leaf from the tree, held it close to her breast and then pressed the breast until a few drops of milk exuded. Then she dropped the leaf, and again held up her baby to the gaze of the astonished men below. Needless to say, she escaped with her life.—London Globe.

Time at the North Pole.

At the north pole time is nothing, and if one were residing at the north pole it would be unnecessary to wind one's watch. You are always at 12 o'clock and can't walk out of the hotel without walking south. All times of day meet at the pole, as the meeting-place of all the meridians. A man sitting with the invisible mathematical point right under him would be in all 24 hours at once. Or a 24-hour watch placed on the pole could be made to point to the correct time in every part of the world. There used to be something of an approximation to this in the extreme north of Norway, where the degrees of longitude squeeze in, until recent days. Captains of Norwegian coasting schooners will tell you how inconvenient it was to change between the time of Holland at Bergen and that of Crete at the North Cape, while correct local time was maintained. General Norwegian time became indispensable.—London Chronicle.

So He Didn't.

Little George, aged 3½ years, owns a rocking horse, which he does not care much for. One day his aunt was looking at a Christmas book and turned to a picture of a little boy on a rocking horse. A little girl was standing back of the horse pulling its tail. George's aunt said: "George, come and look at this little boy on a rocking horse just like yours, and having such a good time; why don't you care for yours?" George looked at it a minute, considering an answer, then turned away indifferently, saying: "I don't have any little girl to pull his tail."—Cincinnati Commercial Tribune.

HOLD UP "L" AGENT

Early Morning Attack on West Side Employe.

Cashier of Station Hit Over the Head with a Chisel and Rendered Unconscious.

Chicago, Aug. 11.—Robbers visited the Forty-fifth avenue station of the Metropolitan West Side Elevated Railroad company early in the morning. The agent, James Robertson, was beaten into unconsciousness. The robbers after seizing part of the day's receipts became frightened and ran along the elevated structure to the station at Forty-second court, where they boarded an east-bound train.

The agent was sitting at the cashier's window, he told Henry Patten, superintendent of the company, when two men about 20 years old entered the station. They went to the cigar case and asked for a cigar. While Robertson was looking over the case one of them drew a chisel from his pocket and struck him, knocking him unconscious.

Hixon is more than 50 years old and his bride is 48 years old. This is the first marriage of each.

The Alert Man.

"Calmness is a fine trait," said Mr. Bliffly, "but does it always get there? You take the case of two men standing up in a car holding on to straps, both the same age, but one of them quiet and the other quick, and now let the man they are standing in front of get up to leave the car at a station, and suppose these two men are both at exactly the same distance from the seat, each with the same chance as the other for seizing it, which would get that seat? Would it be the calm, cool man who moved deliberately and always with some thought for others, or would it be the ever alert man, quick to move and always on the lookout, not caring a continental for what anybody thinks and always ready to jump in any seat he can nab? Why, while the calm man is thinking it over about what he shall do and beginning to turn that way the alert man is in the seat. I certainly do admire the calm, tranquil man and his good manners, but it is the man ever on the alert that gets the seat in the car—and other things."—New York Sun.

The Back of a Glove.

The meaning of the three marks on the back of a glove and the clocks on a stocking were two of the little mysteries of dress explained at a lecture on clothes in London. The lecturer said that the three marks on the back of a glove corresponed to the fourchette pieces between the fingers, and in olden days these pieces were continued along the back of the hand, braid being used to conceal the seams. A somewhat similar origin was assigned to the ornamental clock on the stocking. In the days when stockings were made of cloth the seams came where the clocks do now, the ornamentation then being used to hide the seams. The useless little bow in the leather band lining a man's hat is a survival of the time when a hat was made by taking a piece of leather, boring two holes through it and drawing it up with a piece of string.

Fashions in Borneo.

According to the rules of Borneoan fashion it is deemed necessary to mold one's limbs into a more shapely form than that bestowed by nature. This is done really effectively by winding strong brass wire round the ankles, the wrists, under the knees and above the elbows of children. Growth at these points is, in consequence, greatly hampered, with the result that the limbs come to be deformed or, according to Dyak ideas, brought into proper shape. The headdress consists of a curious headwork cap, and around his neck a bridegroom to be wears bangles of plaited fiber and strings of cowrie shells. These shells, by the way, as in other parts of the world, are used as currency. A yard of fiber or twenty to thirty cowrie shells represent the value of a penny. The white armlets are made of another species of shells.—Wide World Magazine.

What a Toad Enjoys.

There are few things more amusing than to watch a toad submitting to the operations of a back scratching. He will at first look somewhat suspiciously at the twig which you are advancing toward him, but after two or three passes down his back his manner undergoes a marked change, his eyes close with an expression of infinite rapture, he plants his feet wider apart, and his body swells out to nearly double its ordinary size, as if to obtain by these means more room for enjoyment. Thus he will remain until you make some sudden movement which startles him or until he has had as much petting as he wants, when, with a puff of regretful delight, he will reduce himself to his usual dimensions and hop away, bent once more on the pleasures of the chase.

MAYOR GAYNOR'S CHANCES IMPROVE

No Operation for Assassin's Bullet Yet Performed.

CONDITION IS STILL CRITICAL

Mrs. Gaynor and Son Remain at Hospital at Bedside of the Stricken Mayor of New York City—Crisis Due Today.

New York, Aug. 11.—Physicians attending Mayor Gaynor at St. Mary's hospital note nothing but improvements in their patient's condition. So favorable was his case that the surgeons decided not to attempt an operation for the removal of the split bullet that has lodged in the mayor's neck.

Such was the condition of Mayor Gaynor that after consultation the three New York specialists who had been in continuous attendance at the bedside together with the hospital staff of surgeons and other physicians from outside the institution went back to New York, leaving the mayor in the care of only two watchers.

"We have ascertained that the bullet's fragments do not lie among any of the major blood vessels," said the physicians' statement. "It is not necessary to get it out now, for the wound is still sore because it would be a useless irritation and would tax the mayor's strength unnecessarily. Unless complications arise the removel of the bullet will not be attempted for the present."

The physicians also stated frankly just what dangers still had to be guarded against. There are two contingencies which might bring about a serious relapse in the mayor's condition. The first of these is septicemia, due to infection of the wound; if no trace of this complication appears within forty-eight hours after the time the wound was inflicted—10 o'clock this morning—the physicians may reasonably dismiss the fear of blood poisoning.

The second act that would weigh heavily against the mayor's chances of recovery if it should appear is the weakening and breaking of an artery with the consequent hemorrhage. This rupture of an artery might occur at any time during the next ten days or two weeks and it would come without a minute's warning.

Under the circumstances it was conceded by all of the physicians attending the mayor that today must come somewhat in the nature of a crisis. If it passes without any indications of irritation in the wound, the doctors will believe that they have Mayor Gaynor fairly on the road to recovery.

Mayor Gaynor's condition seemed so much better at 10 o'clock last night that all the attending physicians left St. Mary's hospital except Dr. Stewart and of the family only Mrs. Gaynor and Rufus Gaynor remained.

There were no alarming symptoms, though the patient's temperature was a little above the normal. Mr. Gaynor was able to speak with usual clearness and when taking his chicken broth experienced little difficulty in swallowing it.

As for Gallagher, over-night reflection in the Hudson county jail seems to have tempered his sullen defiance, for he retracted the statement he had made just after the shooting in which he glorified and justified his deed. He told the assistant prosecutor of Hudson county and his lawyers, who visited him in his cell, that he was sorry that he had shot Mayor Gaynor and that he hoped the mayor's life would be spared. But his obstinacy led him to quality even this exhibition of contrition.

"I am sorry I shot Gaynor, but I feel no remorse," said Gallagher. "I had to do it as a lesson to the country—to teach high officials to regard the rights of their subordinates."

LAST HONOR TO MICHAELIS

Judges, Lawyers and Prominent Men Attend Publisher's Funeral.

Chicago, Aug. 11.—Walter R. Michaelis, publisher of the Staats Zeitung and prominent resident of Chicago, who was drowned at Quaqe Lake, N. Y., while trying to save his daughter, aged 8, was buried at Rosehill.

Services for the family was held at the residence, 3022 Kenomre avenue. Judges, prominent members of the bar, business men, and others paid honor to the memory of Mr. Michaelis by attending the funeral, as also did representatives of the United Societies, of which he was president.

Dying to Order.

Dying to order is one of the most sacred customs of the American Indian. Many years ago Standing Elk went to Major James McLaughlin, the author of "My Friend the Indian," and said, "Father, my wife will die today, and she wants a coffin from you."

The major asked him what the ailment was, and he replied:

"Just nothing but that she heard the ghosts calling and must go."

Somebody had told her, it turned out, that she was sick, so she had "painted for death," and all her relatives had gathered about to lament her—and incidentally divide her property as soon as she was dead. There was no use in the major's arguing about it, so he had the coffin made.

In many cases those "painted for death" are actually bullied into dying, but Mrs. Standing Elk was still too vigorous. Finally in despair she carried the coffin into the house on her own shoulders, and several years later the major saw it still standing on end in her house. Shelves had been fitted into it, and it was doing duty as a cupboard.—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

SOLDIERS FIGHT FIRES

200 Regulars Battle With Flames In Yellowstone Park.

Conflagrations Threatened to Destroy Large Areas of Magnificent Forest Trees.

Livingston, Mont., Aug. 11.—Soldiers of Uncle Sam fought all night to save one of the most beautiful playgrounds of the nation from devastation from fire. The conflagrations, which have been ravaging the northwest, invaded the Yellowstone National park.

From Bell mountain came the news that the forest was ablaze. A pillar of smoke rising over St. Mary's gave signal of a similar disaster. Still graver conditions were reported from southeast of Lake Yellowstone by smoke-grimed couriers.

As quickly as orders could be given 200 regular soldiers stationed in the park were marching against the foe. That large areas of the magnificent trees fostered as a part of the national forest reserve were doomed to denudation was apparent from the first, but the courage and discipline of the seasoned fire fighters eventually stopped the advance of the Bell and St. Mary's mountain fires, saving miles of woodland from destruction.

At Lake Yellowstone the fire was more stubborn. It was feared that the loss in timber as well as injury to the beauty of the park, would be great.

Saginaw, Mich., Aug. 11.—Thelmann Bielzeski, a young farmer who was working as fireman on a portable wood mill near here, had a narrow escape from death, and three fellow workmen were severely scalded when the boiler of the traction engine, furnishing the power for the apparatus, exploded.

Bielzeski was rushed to a hospital in this city with his body horribly burned. Physcians gave hope for his recovery.

AVIATOR BROKINS IS BADLY INJURED

Falls at Asbury Park Meeting Into Crowd of People.

EIGHT PERSONS ARE INJURED

George Barnett, One of the Injured, May Die of Injuries—Doctors Do Not Expect Brokins to Die as Result of His Fall.

Asbury Park, N. J., Aug. 11.—Walter A. Brokins, the youthful pupil of the Wrights, who on July 9 climbed to the record height of 6,275 feet at Atlantic City, then coasted safely to earth, with his power shut off, crashed to earth from a height of about fifty feet during the first hour of the opening of the ten day aviation meet here. This is the first time since aviation began to draw big crowds of onlookers that an aeroplane has tumbled down on the spectators.

Seven persons besides Brokins were injured. One 14-year-old boy named George Burnett of Spring Lake, was crushed beneath the frame work of the lower part of the main planes of the machine, and had his skull fractured and his hip broken. He was removed to the Long Branch hospital. The boy probably will die.

When Brokins was found beneath the tangle of the torn plane fabric and splintered frame work and wires, he lay on the sod of the aviation field with his face in a pool of blood and his right hand still grasping the steering lever. He was thought to be dead as he was dragged out of the wreck by Chief of Police Sexton and Private Henry Kruschkna, of the Third Infantry, New Jersey National Guard.

The doctors say that a superficial examination showed that Brokins has a broken nose, a severely lacerated head and face, his eyes are closed and he has general bruises about the body. The doctors do not expect fatal results from his fall.

Brokins says his fall was due to efforts he was making while descending to avoid a crowd of camera men and other spectators grouped on the aviation field a few feet in front of the north end of the uncovered grand stand which at this point was solidly packed with spectators. When about fifty feet over the heads of the grand stand crowd the aeroplane was seen to tip at what seemed to be almost an angle of 45 degrees as the aviator tried to swing his machine in a sharp circle between the grand stand and the knot of men on the field.

Had the aeroplane fallen ten feet further back in its flight it would have crashed upon the grand stand crowd and crushed many men, women and children who a few moments before were cheering the aviator. One could almost reach out and touch the wreckage from the front row of the grand stand seats. Shrieks of terror arose from the onlookers, men and women crouched and with upraised hands seemed to try to ward off the weight bearing toward them.

The aeroplane fell upon a group of the program sellers, policemen and special deputies and some small boys who had been flying kites of strange design before Brokins took the air. The plane smashed through a cigar case standing on the grass at the starboard edges of the planes tearing through the wire netting that was supposed to keep the crowd back. The six who were hurt besides Brokins and the Burnett boy were:

Policeman Richard Bradford, Asbury Park, right shoulder and right arm bruised and lacerated, tongue cut.

Henry Fromme, 14 years old, son of Lawyer Henry Fromme of New York. The boy suffered bruises on the head and body, but was not seriously injured.

Morris Gorsuch, 30 years old, Asbury Park, right forearm broken.

Policeman John Reed, Asbury Park, bruised about body.

Samuel Murgatory, a boy, right arm broken and shoulder dislocated.

Gerald O'Grady, 10 years old, right side cut and bruised.

The injured were attended to by Drs. Taylor, Robinson and Potts, and by Mrs. Frank Coffyn, a trained nurse, who is the wife of one of the Wrights' pupils.

TAR AND FEATHER WEALTHY FARMER

Attentions to a Rich, Attractive Widow Is Alleged Cause.

WARRANTS ISSUED FOR PARTY

Frank Sichart Tied to Pole When Mixture Was Placed on Him—Left In That Condition Until Rescued by Passenger Crew.

Atlantic City, Aug. 11.—Frank Sichart, a Cardiff farmer, lies in the city hospital here suffering from cuts and bruises administered with a coat of tar and feathers by three men near his home because of his alleged attentions to a wealthy widow. His body is raw in places where hordes of mosquitoes bit him during the terrible hours he stood tied fast to a telegraph pole unprotected by a stitch of clothing. The sticky tar, which his assailants used, is baffling the efforts of physicians to remove and they may have to resort to the use of acids to get the stuff off his body. They fear the poison of the coal tar will penetrate through the pores of his skin before it can all be taken off.

He was rescued by a crew of trainmen on a passenger train who found him almost dead where his assailants had fastened him to the pole. Sichart's anger over the inhuman treatment, bore him up and he later started for Mays Landing, about six miles from the scene of the affair with his son. He attempted to swear out a warrant for the trio who had attacked him, but according to report, Magistrate Izard to whom he applied, advised him to catch the first train to Atlantic City and go to the hospital. He and Andrew, his son-in-law, boarded the train which reached the resort at 10:45 last night. During the trip the elder Sichart suffered agony from his injuries and several time fainted.

A throng of several hundred people forgot to board their train at the station as they gathered around Sichart, who was attired in nothing but a large red bathing robe and still in his barefeet. The farmer was rushed in an ambulance to the city hospital, where the physicians started to alleviate his sufferings. Several times he became unconscious, but showed remarkable courage during the delicate operation of removing the mass of tar and feathers.

Frightened at the rough treatment he received the man lost his nerve and refused to swear out a warrant here for his assailants, but his son appeared before Magistrate Jagmety and secured the necessary papers, which were put in the hands of County Detective Gaitzel to serve. He left on the first train this morning to endeavor to apprehend the three men.

The members of the Sichart family tell conflicting stories concerning the relations of the injured man with the wealthy widow.

Where Looks Don't Matter.

Apropos of a titled foreigner's marriage to a rich and rather plain American girl a New Yorker said:

"The count has no cause to complain. The ethics of such a marriage as his are but the ethics of the matrimonial agency.

"A man called at a matrimonial agency.

"'I am interested,' he said, 'in the young lady who has $250,000 in her own right. Could you let me see her photograph?'

"'No; that is not the custom,' the agent replied. 'In any case over $100,000 the photograph is never asked for.'"

"I want the office, of course," said the aspiring statesman, "but not unless I am the people's choice."

"We can fix that, too," said his campaign manager, "only you know it's a good deal more expensive to be the people's choice than it is to go in as the compromise candidate."—Chicago Tribune.

A Conclusion.

STOREHOUSE IS RAIDED

Several Barrels and 4,800 Bottles of Beer Confiscated.

Thirsty Crowd of Men and Boys Attack Drays and Roll Off Ten Barrels—Occurs in "Dry" Indiana.

Sullivan, Ind., Aug. 11.—In a raid on a storehouse at Shelburn, Sheriff Wible seized several barrels and 4,000 bottles of beer, the biggest consignment in the history of "blind tiger" operations in Sullivan county. Before the drays, carrying the beer, had left Shelburn, a mob of thirsty men and boys attacked them and rolled off ten barrels of beer. While in the act of opening the barrels, an automobile carrying Sheriff Wible, Deputy Kelley and Deputy Prosecutor Bedwell reached the scene and dispersed the crowd.

The beer was reloaded and the rest of the journey to Sullivan was uneventful. In a raid on refrigerator cars on the Evansville and Terre Haute railroad which had arrived in Shelburn, no beer was found, it having been taken to the storehouse. The lock was broken and entrance effected.

CHARLES L. ROBERTSON

IS A CANDIDATE FOR PROSECUTING ATTORNEY

Graduated from Law Department of the U. of M.

Was Appointed Assistant Prosecutor by Hon. T. M. Joslin

Charles L. Robertson of this city, has filed with the County Clerk his petitions for the placing of his name upon the primary ballot to be voted for as a candidate for the office of Prosecuting Attorney at the Republican Primaries to be held upon the 6th day of September, 1910.

He was born October 27, 1880, at the village of Blissfield, his father being Josephus M. Robertson, one of the pioneer Republican residents of Ogden township. Receiving his education in the public schools of Blissfield he graduated therefrom in the class of 1898, and, after teaching school in the Township of Deerfield for one year, entered the Law Department of the University of Michigan in the fall of of 1899, graduating with the class of 1902 and being at once admitted to practice before the Supreme Court of the State of Michigan.

In July of the same year he entered into the active practice of law in the city of Adrian in the office of Herbert R. Clark, and since that time has made Adrian his home. Shortly after engaging in the practice of law, Mr Robertson was appointed assistant prosecuting attorney by Theodore M. Joslin who was at that time prosecutor, and held that position until the expiration of Mr. Joslin's term, and was a candidate to succeed him at Republican Primaries, being defeated therefor by less than one hundred votes by the present Prosecutor, Burton L. Hart. As Assistant Prosecutor he brought to the office a strong, active and vigorous personality, gifted with tact and good judgment. During this time over fourteen hundred prosecutions were instituted through this office and over half of those reaching the Circuit Court were tried by Mr. Robertson alone thus giving him an opportunity to become thoroughly acquainted with all the details of criminal procedure as well as other matters which pertain to the office of Prosecuting Attorney.

As a lawyer he is progressive and energetic, and strict attention to business has resulted in large and growing law practice. As one of the promoters and incorporators of the National Bank of Commerce and the Commonwealth Company, Mr. Robertson is well known in the business affairs of the city.

The office of Prosecuting Attorney is a most important office and its incumbent should be a man who has had experience not only in the details of the office but also in the trial and preparation of cases before the court. The Prosecuting Attorney should be a man of ability, of courage and large legal experience and one who will enforce the law as it is.

Mr. Robertson's friends who urged him to allow his name to be placed upon the primary ballot believe him to be such a man and one that is worthy of the confidence of the people of this county and that it will be of their best interests that he be selected as the nominee of the Republican party at the polls on the 6th day of September next.

Hot Weather Affects the Skin.

Tender skins are bound to be affected by the increased amount of poison in the copious perspiration thrown off during hot weather. Rashes, hives, blotches, pimples, prickly heat result. Often too, serious skin troubles begin this way.

To wash away the poison entirely, to clean and cool the skin, make an application of a simple solution of wintergreen with thymol, known as D. D. D. Prescription. Doctors prescribe this D. D. D. Prescription for eczema. It is sold for the purpose in dollar bottles, but we can give you for 25 cents enough D. D. D. to keep your skin fresh and clean from summer blemishes.

If there is any itch this wintergreen lotion will take it away instantly, the very second it is applied to the skin. We assure you of this for we have seen the result with D. D. D.

THE SYNOPSIS OF THE MORNING BROOKLYN TABERNACLE BIBLE STUDIES

"GO YE ALSO INTO THE VINEYARD."

Matthew 20:1-16.—August 14.

"Many that are first shall be last; and the last shall be first."—Matt. 19:30.

GRAPE culture was one of the main industries of the days of the Great Teacher. The stony hillsides of Palestine were once terraced and extensively used as vineyards. On our recent visit we noted with particular interest the revival of this custom, as one of the evidences of the beginning of restitution of the Holy Land.—Acts 3:19-21.

The grapevine was honored of the Master, in that he used it in a parable, to symbolize himself and the Church, saying, "I am the Vine, ye are the branches;" "My Father is the husbandman;" "Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit;" "Every branch in me which beareth fruit he pruneth it that it may bring forth more fruit;" "Every branch in me that beareth not fruit he taketh away."

Our present Study, the Parable of the Laborers, is in full accord with the foregoing, but shows the matter from a different standpoint. It shows how each one of the Lord's consecrated Church, each heir of the Messianic Kingdom shortly to be established, is privileged to be a co-laborer with his Lord and Master and with the Heavenly Father in the vineyard work—tending the vine, looking out for the injurious pests, keeping the soil in good condition, assisting every way in the production of "much fruit" and of fine quality. Evidently many Christian people do not appreciate the privilege of being laborers in the Church of Christ—"building one another up in the most holy faith" until we all come to the full stature of a man in the Anointed One.

St. Paul appreciated this privilege greatly, saying, God hath made us qualified servants of the New Covenant. So then we, as ambassadors for God, beseech men, Be ye reconciled to God. (2 Corinthians 5:20.) Whoever is negligent of his opportunities to serve others who manifest a hearing ear, a humble heart and a teachable spirit shows his own lack of appreciation of God's message. He thus indicates that he has not come to a knowledge of God nor to a knowledge of the Truth respecting the Divine Plan. And indeed the Scriptures declare that a deep knowledge of God, his Word and his purposes, is attained only as a gift of God, bestowed only upon those who are in a humble, faithful, zealous attitude of mind—"To you it is given to know the mysteries of the Kingdom of God."

The things pertaining to God's Kingdom, in its future operation toward the world for a thousand years, will be openly manifested to every creature, shortly. But now it is appropriate, and is the Divine will, that these things should be known only to the Church, the consecrated, the spirit-begotten sons of God. Likewise there are important truths pertaining to the Kingdom class, the Church, which is being prepared to be the Bride of Christ and his joint-heirs in the Kingdom. And these things are likewise intended to be comparatively secret—to be clearly and full understood only by such as have made a covenant with the Lord by sacrifice. (Psalms 50:5.) "The secret of the Lord is with them that reverence him, and he will show them his Covenant." (Psalms 25:14.) All such in close sympathy with the Divine purposes will be anxious to serve the Lord, the Truth and the brethren. And such from time to time will be specially sent into the Vineyard, and will be specially used of the Lord for the assistance of his consecrated people in various ways.

The word "penny" here is from the Greek denarius, a silver coin of about 17 cents value. But the value of money has so changed in recent years that today a laborer's wage in proportion to other things would be considerable more. The denarius was the Roman standard of that time, as the lira is the Italian standard, the mark the German standard, the franc the French standard, the shilling the English standard and the dollar the American standard. It is worthy of note that in one of the fine old English cathedrals the records show that its excellent chisel work, superior to anything of today, cost "A penny a day and a bag of meal for each laborer." The parable of our lesson is evidently intended to teach that God will give all that he has agreed to all who labor—that he may in generosity give more than he has stipulated.

At the close of the day, we read, those first hired murmured against their lord. We cannot suppose that any who would be counted worthy of a share in the Kingdom would murmur against the Giver of all Good. The rewarding is to be expected at the close of the harvest day and the murmuring may be expected there also. The "penny" or reward would thus seem to be something of the joys, blessings, honors and privileges of God's people in the present life, at the close of this age. Those who murmur that they do not receive a sufficiency of honor and distinction and of Divine acknowledgment will be thereby proving themselves unfit for the future service "beyond the veil," as members of the Church in glory. This would seem to point a warning to those of God's people who have been long in the Truth and who have had great privileges of service, that if they murmur against the blessings and rewards coming to them, it will mean that they were laboring for the reward merely and not appreciating the privilege of being laborers with Christ and with the Father; it would imply that they had failed to enter into the spirit of the wonderful privileges granted them of serving the Lord, the Truth and the brethren. The right spirit, the proper interest in the Father's work and in the brethren should prompt all to rejoice with every new laborer and to be glad that all such should receive of the Lord's favors, blessings and enlightenment as fully, as freely, as themselves. Surely any who have not this spirit have not the spirit of Christ on this subject.

The general lesson is that God is so just, so generous, so bountiful, in his dealings that all those who appreciate matters from his standpoint will rejoice in the blessings which overflow upon others. A failure to appreciate the Lord's generosity was one cause of stumbling to the Jews eighteen centuries ago—they were offended that the Gospel message should go out beyond them to the Gentiles. Similarly today some Christian people are stumbling over the fact that the Word of God shows that, whereas Divine blessings are now confined to the Church, "the elect," the servants and handmaidens of the Gospel Age, yet the time is near at hand when "God will pour out his spirit upon all flesh," and when all the families of the earth shall be blessed.

All who have the privilege of bearing the labor and heat of the day in the Lord's service must be glad of the privilege, in order to be worthy of participation in the Kingdom. Thus some who seem to be first in their promptness to respond to the Lord's call for laborers may be amongst the last to receive special blessings of grace and Truth and this may serve as a special test upon them—as respects their loyalty, and the motives which actuated them in engaging in the Vineyard work.

MICHIGAN NEWS

According to the monthly crop report issued from the office of the secretary of state, the severe frosts in the budding season, ravages of insects and the extremely dry and hot weather during the month of July have so injured the apple crop that this year's yield will be the lightest in the past 10 years. The winter varities that promise best are in their order: Baldwin, Northern Spy, Ben Davis, Russett and Greening.

The poor prospect for an average crop of peaches in the Michigan belt is 39 per cent and in the state 49 per cent. One year ago the prospect was 77 and 67 per cent respectfully.

Aside from a few complaints of smut, correspondents quite generally report that wheat is of good quality and the yield is above the average for the past 10 years. The average estimated yield per acre is 18 bushels. Last month 231, 184 bushels of wheat were marketed indicating that the 1909 crop has been disposed of.

Neither oats, corn, potatoes nor sugar beets come up to the average of a year ago, and it is estimated that all of these crops will fall short of the 1909 yield.

$7,000 LOSS

Result of Britton's Fire

The total loss from Tuesdays fire at Britton is estimated at $7,000. This is mostly covered by insurance.

The fire was started by sparks from a passing D. T. & I. engine starting in Frank Pocklington's barn and burning both his barn and house also the houses and barns adjoining, owned by E. A. Elkington and Frank Swick.

Most of their household furnishings were saved but the contents of Mr. Pocklingtons were entirely lost.

UNCLE SAM PAYS 3 CENTS PER FOR BIRTH RECORDS

The federal government has asked the secretary of state to furnish the state department at Washington a record of all the births registered in the Michigan office last year, for which Uncle Sam is willing to pay 3 cents per. This will necessitate the making out of about 60,000 transcripts. Last year the state made a little money after paying the salaries of additional clerks but it is not considered a money-making scheme as the government figures that the money it pass the state will just about cover the expense of preparing the record.

Last year the state department was commended by the federal authorities for promptness and accuracy in preparing the reports, Michigan being one fo the first states in the union to be recognized in this manner.

MICHIGAN MARKSMAN COST STATE SUM OF $6,463

Rifle practice by the Michigan National Guard at the Detroit range cost $6,562.56 according to the estimate made Tuesday by Capt. O. H. Tower, paymaster of the state troops. Of this amount the federal government pays $4,811.35. More marksmen participated in this shoot than ever before in the history of the state it is announced.

K. OF P. PICNIC

AT SAND LAKE, THURSDAY

Perfect Day--Jolly Crowd

There never was a more perfect day for a picnic than yesterday when the annual K. of P. picnic of the Tecumseh and Tipton lodges was held at Sand lake.

About 200 people were in attendance and all thoroughly enjoyed the day. Although the crowd was large, they were a jolly bunch and were bound to have a good time.

The speech by Mr. Weidemeyer of Ann Arbor was very eloquently given and was on his trip to South America and Alaska.

Among the attractive features of the day were a ball game and tug of war, Tecumseh winning the former by a score of 12 to 4; Tipton winning the latter. Tecumseh Band furnished music for the day. Nellie Mingay assisted on the program with several readings which all enjoyed.

At noon a very bountiful dinner was partaken of and the remainder of the time was spent in dancing.

Everyone was thoroughly pleased with the day and will look forward to the next picnic.

A number of Tecumseh people who attended the K. of P. picnic went over to Wamplers lake that evening. They heard the Saxaphone Trio and report it as one of the best of its kind ever in their community. Great credit is due to Geo. Nisle, proprietor of the Farm, for obtaining such a fine orchestra.

The Merwin-Snedecor wedding came pretty near ending in an elopement. When the auto came to take the bridal party to the station the driver of the machine saw Mrs. Tess Acker-Clark one of the guests standing near and he hustled her into the machine thinking she was the bride. The bridegroom must have been a bit rattled because the machine started away without the bride and he did not seem to miss her. The mistake was discovered in time however by some of the guests who stopped the auto and saw that the bride was added to the wedding party.—Adrian Times.

KELLEY-DENSMORE REUNION

HELD AT LORENZO KENYON'S WEDNESDAY AUGUST 10

The 20th reunion of the Kelley-Densmore families took place on Wednesday, August 10, at the beautiful farm residence of Lorenzo Kenyon situated one mile south of Tecumseh.

The day was beautiful and the people began to arrive at 10 o'clock from Raisin, Ridgeway, Tecumseh, Tipton Adrian, Holloway, Albion, Battle Creek, Clinton, Elkhart, Ind., and other places. Some of the Kenyons arrived from Monroe in the afternoon B. B. Bower of Battle Creek and Verne Kelley of Adrian drove in with their automobiles bringing their wives, families and other friends.

After hearty hand shakes and visiting in groups here and there on the beautiful lawn, playing tennis and other games, Mr. Kenyon announced that it was time to go to dinner, the autos and buggies were brought into use and quickly conveyed all to the Coller House at Tecumseh where a bountiful repast was served nicely under the trees in the yard. Grace was pronounced by Rev. Luther Kenyon of Orleans Mich. and about sixty-five were seated at the tables.

All were conveyed back to the home of Lorenzo Kenyon after dinner where the afternoon was spent in visiting, listening to the program furnished largely by the young people.

The President H. C. Wilson of Blissfield after calling the meeting to order made a few general and pointed remarks as to previous reunions stating where they had been held, five had been held at the home of Moses Densmore at Hanover and three at the home of Fred Kopke in Raisin the rest being scattered around at different places. The president spoke feelingly of the death of Moses Densmore who always had been so closely connected with these reunions, prayer was then offered by Rev. Cargo of tha Congregational church at Holloway and then in the absence of Mrs. Ida Ryon Niles, Mrs. Luetta Cummins of Albion read the minutes of the previous meeting. This was followed by a pretty vocal duet by Lucile Kelley and Marion Kopke, after pleasing recitations by Harold and Ada Kenyon the following resolutions were read by Mrs. Alice Kennedy of Albion Mich. Resolutions of Sympathy; whereas it has pleased our heavenly father in his infinite wisdom to remove from us by death Moses Densmore who departed this life June 15, 1910. and Theresa Densmore Kaiser wife of Josiah Densmore also Jennie L. Kenyon who died Dec. 16, 1909 and grandson Theodore W. Westgate who died June 12, 1909 and Ernest E. Wisner who died at Kaswell, New-Mexico May 7, 1910. Therefore be it resolved that we the members of the Densmore, Kelley families regret the loss of these loved ones from our midst and we humbly bow in submission to that will of him who doeth all things well and extend to the bereaved families our heartfelt sympathy be it further resolved that a copy of these resolutions be copied in our journal and printed in a local paper and a copy forwarded to each family. Alice Kennedy, Betsy Moore, Effie Strait committee on resolutions.

After a song by Ada Kenyon the president called upon different ones for remarks, Fred Kopke in allusion to what the president said in introducing said the best way to find out how to grow two ears of corn on one stalk was for the president and others to come and see. notwithstanding the sore fingers from sand burrs, and the the sand hills on his farm he has many acres of the finest corn in Lenawee County. Supt. E. A. Wilson of Ill., spoke of calling upon Zeno Kelley's daughter at Oakland Cal., on his western trip a year ago, also of calling upon William Kelley of New Bedford, Mass, while at the N. E. A. at Boston during the present summer He related the story of his wife's swimming in Great Salt Lake and if of the right build, of the ease in floating or swimming. He being of the lean-order had no difficulty in righting himself from the swimming position, but with his wife it was different. After this exhilerating both in water twenty five per cent salt he righted his charge and walked out feeling better. He also mentioned his trip through the Yellowstone

Rev. Luther Kenyon of Orleans, Mich, spoke of the meeting thirteen years ago at the home of Allen Kelly and related many pleasing incidents connected therewith.

Garrison Moore proved himself to be in the line of a speech maker and I should not be surpised to hear of his taking the stump for one of the gubernatorial candidates the coming fall.

Letters of regret from absent ones were read by Mrs. Luretta Cummins. These were from Mary L. Densmore and Mrs. Chas Densmore of Alma, also from Mrs. I. L. Desmore of Grand Rapids.

The following officers were chosen for the ensuing year, Oscar Cummins, Pres.—Hannah Kopke, Vice Pres.—Ida Lyon Niles, Sec'y-Treas.—Executive Committee—Lorenzo Keyon, Eva Kelly and T. J. Strait—Commitee on Resolutions—Emma Coy Kendal, Betsy A. Moore and Mary Harrison. Next years meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. Loretta Cummins of Albion, Mich.

Mr. and Mrs. Lorenzo Kenyon and family spared no pains in making this reunion an enjoyable one and it can be said, truthfully that it was one of the most successful ones ever held. It is hoped that there may be many more just like it.

The company was there served plentifully with delicious ice cream and cake after which Mrs. Rufus Kenyon rendered a fine solo and responded to an encore. All joined in singing "God be with You till We meet again," and there the day closed.

Stories of Frederick the Great.

In the course of some military evolutions Frederick the Great of Prussia, irritated by some mistake of a captain, ran after him with his stick in order to strike him. The captain ran away. The next morning the commanding officer reported to the king that the officer in question, one of the most efficient in the regiment, had sent in his papers. "Tell him to come to me," said the king. The officer, in great perturbation, came. "Good morning, major," he apostrophized the officer, who was speechless with surprise. "I wanted to tell you of your promotion, but you ran so fast I could not catch you up. Good morning."

Another time an officer attempted to get a comrade into bad odor with the king by telling his majesty that he was a drunkard. In a subsequent battle the latter's fitness was conspicuous, whereas his slanderer played a very poor part. When afterward he defiled past the king at the head of his regiment his majesty called out to him in a voice of thunder, "The sooner you take to drink the better!"

The Old Time Surgeon.

Before anaesthetics were known the surgeon's only expedient was to abridge his patient's sufferings by working rapidly. In this the old time surgeons did wonders. They had a control and a surety in their hands that are now seldom found. One day the celebrated surgeon Maisonneure had to amputate the leg of a poor devil, who began to howl in advance. "I'll give you my watch," said the surgeon, "if the operation lasts more than a minute." The man accepted the offer, but was obliged to forego the handsome watch, as the operation took less time than it requires to describe. To amputate an arm at the shoulder is a most difficult operation. Dr. Langenbeck of Germany did it in two minutes. A young physician who came to see him perform the operation adjusted his spectacles to his nose so as not to lose a single movement, but when the spectacles were in place the operation was over and the severed arm lay on the floor. Times have changed much since then.

Free Sample Aids Old Men

The sudden change from years of activity of both body and mind to the quiet of later years causes the human system to undergo many changes, chief of which is in the digestive organs.

It becomes harder and harder to get the bowels to move promptly and regularly and in consequence many elderly men suffer not only from the bad to ble, constipation, but from indigestion, headache, belching, sour stomach, drowsiness after eating and similar annoyances. It is first of all necessary to keep the bowels open and then to tone the digestive muscles so as to get them to again do their work naturally. A violent cathartic or purgative is not only unnecessary but harmful, and something mild will do the work just as well.

After you have got through experimenting with salts and pills and waters of various kinds, and have become convinced that they do only temporary good at best, then try Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, a mild, gentle, pleasant-tasting laxative tonic that is especially adapted to the requirements of old people, women and children, and yet is effective enough for anybody. Your druggist, who has handled it successfully for a quarter of a century, will sell you a bottle for fifty cents or one dollar, but if you want to make a test of it before spending any money send your name and address to Dr. Caldwell and he will gladly send you a sample bottle free of charge.

This remedy is rapidly displacing all other forms of medication for the cure of stomach, liver and bowel trouble, and families like Mr. O. F. Wisher's of Sycamore, Ill., and Mrs. Carrie Culler's of 325 N. Notre Dame street, South Bend, Ind., are now never without it in the house. They have tested it and know its grand value to every member of the family.

Dr. Caldwell personally will be pleased to give you any medical advice you may desire for yourself or family pertaining to the stomach, liver or bowels absolutely free of charge. Explain your case in a letter and he will reply to you in detail. For the free sample simply send your name and address on a postal card or otherwise. For either request the doctor's address is Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 500 Caldwell building, Monticello, Ill.

Kaufman-Langford Bout Tonight.

Philadelphia, Aug. 11.—The bout between Al Kaufman and Sam Langford of Boston was postponed yesterday afternoon by Promoter H. D. Edwards because of the heavy fall of rain. The bout will come off tonight.

Friendship.

Friendship is a vase which when it is flawed by heat or violence or accident may as well be broken at once. It can never be trusted again. The more graceful and ornamental it was the more clearly do we discern the hopelessness of restoring it to its former state.

A Continued Story.

"What did your wife say when you stayed out so late last night?"

"I don't know. She hasn't finished telling it all to me yet."—Detroit Free Press.

In this world it is not what we take up, but what we give up, that makes us rich.—Beecher.

Dashing Into Danger.

"When I was younger," a big Broadway traffic cop remarked, "I used to cuss at everybody who insisted on dashing across the street in front of a car or truck. I cuss the act still, but not the person. Fact is, I've learned that a majority of people just can't help it. An approaching vehicle about to cross their path is like a red rag to a bull. It's a sort of challenge, a dare. And the impulse to defeat its purpose can't be controlled. There isn't any plan of action. It's a case of dash first and think afterward, and sometimes, of course, the thinking is done in a hospital.

"It's a sort of disease of the nerves, I guess, because the head of a business house will do this fool thing just as quick as his errand boy will. But the cop and the driver are to blame whenever there's a miscalculation."—New York Globe.

Fenced In.

Near Harvard square, in Cambridge, stands the old elm under which Washington first took command of the American army. Around this tree is an iron picket fence inclosure perhaps a couple of rods across. One night a man who had imbibed too freely stumbled against this circular fence. Grasping one picket after another, he groped his way painfully round and round the outside of the inclosure about a dozen times. Finally he sank down in utter despair. "Oh, ain't it awful—fenced in and no gate to get out of it!" said he as a party of students rescued him and took him home.—National Monthly.

A Pearl Stringer's Keen Eye.

The pearl stringer's eye becomes practiced in the detection of real and imitation pearls. One glance is usually sufficient. A genuine pearl has a hard look. It presents a sort of shell-like surface with an indescribable blush. This blush is so cleverly counterfeited in wax imitations that even those who are accustomed to handling pearls day after day are likely to be deceived.

In one of the large New York jewelry houses last winter a customer purchased a hand painted miniature set in a frame of imitation pearls. On examination it was found that several of the pearls had been slightly defaced, and the whole thing was sent to the manufacturing rooms for repairs. By chance it came under the eye of one of the pearl stringers, who instantly detected four genuine pearls in the circle of imitation ones about the picture. The frame had passed through a dozen expert hands without any one's noticing the presence of real pearls. No one could account for their being there. If they had not been detected the purchaser of the frame would have had a bargain, for the four genuine pearls were worth many times more than the picture and the rest of its setting.—New York Tribune.

BURROWS LEADS IN CANVASS

Detroit Information Says Senior Senator Will Be Returned.

MAKES GREAT IMPRESSION

Townsend Weakens Cause by Speeches—Senator Burrows Gives Lie to Old Age Charge by Campaigning With the Vigor of Youth.

Detroit—While election predictions can never be very definite, it is possible to obtain an excellent line on sentiment by personal inquiry in the various sections, and the result of a careful canvass of every county of the state indicates that Senator J. C. Burrows will be nominated for senator in the Republican primary by a majority of from 25,000 to 50,000. A careful weighing of the figures secured places his probable majority at 35,000.

Since the close of congress the senator has been gaining ground every day, and when he completes his campaign throughout the state it is entirely possible that he will run this majority up to 50,000.

This great gain in strength is due to two reasons, primarily, although many things enter into the switch in sentiment, for even the most enthusiastic of the senator's supporters will acknowledge that three months back, owing to the character of the campaign being waged against Senator Burrows, the result was in doubt.

One of the principal campaign weapons of the opponents of Senator Burrows has been his age. The people have been told that he was too old to perform the duties of the office; that he was on the verge of a physical breakdown. Senator Burrows is 73 years old, but he has proven anything but a broken down old man, as he has gone through the campaign thus far in a way to break down the younger members of his party. He has shown the vigor and fire of youth in his speeches and has told the people squarely where he stood on every question.

The other principal point made against Senator Burrows was that he has always been "regular" in the senate. Instead of denying this, the senator has met the issue head-on and has told the people that he stood by his record, and that if he had it to do over again that he would not change a vote. This manly stand has made its appeal to thinking people and, compared with the vacillating course of his opponent on every big issue, has served greatly to strengthen the senator.

Situation in the State.

Taking up the canvass made in the state, it is certain that Senator Burrows will carry Wayne county, the Third, Fourth, Sixth, Seventh, Eighth and Twelfth congressional districts, with an excellent vote in the Fifth. An analysis of the vote of the districts mentioned will show that three-fifths of the vote of the state is in the districts which Senator Burrows will carry. As yet the senator has not spoken in the Tenth district, and his visits to the Fifth, Ninth and Eleventh districts have been few. The Second is conceded to Mr. Townsend, but the indications are all that Senator Burrows will be far better supported in Kalamazoo than Mr. Townsend will be in Jackson.

Wayne For Burrows.

Townsend men have gone so far as to claim Wayne, but this is nonsense. Mr. Townsend will receive a fair vote in Wyandotte, which is in his congressional district, but aside from this he will have no support in the big county of the state. The city of Detroit alone will give a majority for Burrows of from 10,000 to 15,000, because the senator is receiving the solid support of the business and professional men of the city.

He is even stronger in the upper peninsula, which has the greatest population of any congressional district in the state and a Republican enrollment for the fall primary of 44,800. The senator has just completed a tour through that section and it was like the triumphal march of a great leader. Every city visited vied with its neighbor in doing honor to the senior Michigan senator, and he was assured the united support of the Republicans of that section. The same is true of the Saginaw valley and of the Third and Fourth congressional districts, which Senator Burrows represented in the lower house before they were divided.

Here in Detroit it is taken as an accepted fact that Senator Burrows will be returned, and money for betting purposes is going begging in several places.

Burrows Not An Oratorical Star.

Senator Burrows is not a star on the Chatauqua circuit. His fame rests on the sane and faithful performance of his public duty, not on spectacular eruptions that give joy to the Democracy.—Hesperia Journal.

Her Description.

Muggins—Women have such queer ways of expressing themselves! Buggins—Such as? Muggins—Well, my wife was telling me about Miss Yellowleaf and said she was a sight to behold and in the very next breath said she wasn't fit to be seen.—Philadelphia Record.

An Economical Man.

A commercial traveler told of a man who was riding on a train and pretended to become ill after eating a sandwich. The man opened his grip and took out a hot water bag. "He got a sympathetic porter," the commercial man continues, "to fill the water bag with boiling water, and then he opened up his lunch basket, took out a piece of fried steak and warmed it up on the water bag. You talk about your light housekeeping! Then after he had warmed the steak he cut it all up with a pair of scissors and fed it to himself with a pair of sugar tongs, because he would not take a chance with a fork going around a curve. But his finish was a limit. After he had eaten the steak he unscrewed the stopper of the water bag and poured himself out a cup of hot coffee. He had the grounds in the bag all the time."

BRAVE FIGHT FOR LIFE.

Comfort reigned around the little campfire that evening; pipes were smoked and tea was brewed, material accompaniments to chat and cheer. Then some one asked a question; just what, is immaterial; only the answer matters.

"Boys," said Puffle seriously, "I thought last winter I was out of it. Close call, you ask? Well, pretty close, I had started out from Revelstoke with the usual outfit a 25 foot Peterboro loaded down to about the six-hundred-pound limit with all my traps. I went away up Canoe River and had been having pretty good luck, when, boys, I played the fool. I got in a hurry. I took overlong hikes and ate cold grub to save time. We fellows don't dare do that. No man in the winter woods can stand cold grub; he must cook well and take his rest. Then it doesn't matter if he has to wade creeks and sleep wet and live wet days at a time; he can resist it, he's got the fuel in him. We have a rule that when we get in a hurry, we must camp a whole day and think it over. When I found myself going, I did camp and think it over, but I guess I was a bit late about it. I dug Oregon grape and princess pine and boiled them down for blood tonic and was lucky enough to find some foxglove for my heart, which had begun to kick too hard when I climbed. Then I hurt my foot before the roots had put me in shape, and when I found a toe black one morning I knew I must pull for down river. I cached my stuff and started. I had to hurry then.

All day I snowshoed, biting hard on a bit of pine to forget the pain. Nights I'd find a hollow cedar log, cut holes in it about ten feet apart for draft, kindle a fire at the end and lie down on the log. When the fire had burned up to the draft hole at my foot, I moved up another hole. When I couldn't find a log, I'd dig a pit down in the snow, kindle a brush fire in it and sleep at the edge of the ashes. I reached Smith Creek all right, and by then my whole foot was black. Boys—may I live to forget it—I fell in crossing the creek; fell in over head and ears, in ice water, and nothing between me and Revelstoke to help me. If I stopped, besides the certainty of freezing, I knew my hurt would never let me start again; and I didn't think I could keep on going. I felt I was gone, but I resolved I'd die hard and play the game through. Oh I hiked on the raquettes; awful going it was, the pain killing me by inches and every rag on me frozen solid. Night came; I kept on like a madman, for I dared not stop a second. If I drowsed an instant I was dead. I reached White's cabin; all nature urged me to go in for a rest. I had reason enough to know it would be my last rest, so I hit the trail steady with an awful limp. I prayed Kelly might be in his cabin, but it was cold and shut.

When I reached Mosquito Landing I was dying, but the thought of only six miles more kept me going. When I had been hiking steady for 42 hours, I fell into my own door and things swam and went dark. It was three months even to crutches. The saw bones all said I'd die; but didn't I fool 'em? Going out again next winter? Sure. I've got to go back for that cache. A man must live, you know."—Outing.

DISCORDS.

When there is no garden to make every man knows how.

Straws and straw hats show which way the wind blows.

Somehow, we seldom hear the poor talking about the blessings of poverty.

There are always a lot of fellows who would like to see the man at the top fall off.

Out in Iowa a woman had been deaf and dumb for seven years. One day the family mule kicked a dish pan through the kitchen window and the woman said "Drat that mule" and has been talking ever since. The farmer took the mule to town and traded him for a pound of tobacco and a rabbit's foot. It beats all how some men are continuously out of luck.

Some people are so stingy that they are dishonest.

No use talking; a prohibitionist taking a drink amuses people.

In Kansas the hell joke causes almost as much merriment as the keg joke.

My Double

A Girl Graduate Sees Herself In Another Body on Three Occasions.

By DONALD WALLACE.

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

I remember well the night I received my first shock. I received another latter that affected me more than this one, but in a different way. The first was in the nature of a surprise; the second was a terror.

I was but eighteen at the time and was going home to my aunt, with whom I lived, having just finished my education. The journey was a long one, and I had somewhat broken down my nerves from hard study. I did not like to stay overnight at a hotel alone, but did not feel like taking a sleeping car. I was rather a timid girl anyway and had not been used to going about without a protector.

I reached the hotel about 9 o'clock and went immediately to bed and to sleep. I was awakened in the night by a noise in the hall. Several persons passed hurriedly and were talking rapidly. I have always been afraid of fire, especially in a hotel. I got out of bed, went to the door and opened it. At that moment I received my first shock.

Standing in the open door of the room directly opposite mine stood a girl in her nightdress peering out anxiously, just as I was doing. The corridor was lighted, and I could see her plainly. The marvelous feature was that she was myself. There was not the slightest difference between us. We were both in nightdresses, the hair of both was worn in a braid hanging down the back, and her face and figure were replicas of mine.

Both gave a little scream of surprise, and both drew back into our respective rooms. I shut my door and groped my way to my bed. All thought of danger was put out of my head in this remarkable apparition of my other self.

The physician in charge of the seminary I had attended had warned me that if I did not give up study I would break down. But, desirous of being graduated with the class as well as at the head of it, I had disregarded his warning. Now, it seemed to me, I was paying the penalty of my obstinacy. My mind must be giving way. It was long past midnight when I bethought myself that on opening my door I must have looked into a large mirror. I would have got out of bed and satisfied myself of this, but feared to find the contrary, and if I did I would not get any more sleep. So I comforted myself with the assurance that I would in the morning find a mirror opposite my door and dropped into slumber.

I was called early for the train, and when I left my room looked for the mirror. Alas, there was no mirror there, but a door just as I had seen it in the night. I had no time to make investigations, needing to go down to breakfast and to the station.

By the advice of my physician I spent July and August that summer at the seashore. By September I was much improved and spent the month in the mountains. This restored my health, but did not relieve me of an uncanny feeling at having seen myself or my other self at the hotel during my homeward journey. Two years passed during which I had gradually driven the matter out of my mind when I saw the vision again.

Singularly enough, I saw it under circumstances somewhat similar to those connected with its first appearance. It was the second summer after the one during which it had first appeared to me, when I was at —— Springs. I had a room in an extension of a hotel, facing another extension. One morning on arising I went to a window, and there at another window in the other extension stood my double. We were both, as before, in nightdresses and wore our hair plaited on our backs.

Nothing could have induced me to remain at that hotel for another day. I was with friends and surprised them by announcing that I would leave by the next train. They wondered, expostulated, pleaded, but to no purpose. One of them, a girl of my own age, with whom I was very intimate, begged me to tell her why I was leaving and what was the matter with me, for it was plain that I had received a shock of some kind. I would not have told her for the world. I declined to tell any one but my physician, and I wished to consult him as soon as possible. I was sure that I suffered from some kind of mental breakdown, and I only hoped that he would find means to arrest its progress.

On reaching the city I sent for him to come to me at once and told him of this second vision of myself. He tried to reassure me by telling me that I had seen some one who looked very like me. I refused to be comforted. I had seen myself or my exact counterpart. I told him that only one of my own flesh and blood could so closely resemble me and that I had no sister or even cousins so far as I knew. Besides, if this vision were a real person I would see her in a different dress from my own. The doctor explained this by saying that as I had seen her at night and in the early morning I would naturally see her in the dress I wore myself, both of us wearing nightgowns. I tried to consider this within the limit of coincidence, but it was impossible for me to believe that two persons could be so identical in appearance that they should meet twice and both times see each other in a nightdress. No; I had seen this vision first at a time when my physician had warned me that I was breaking down. I had been overstrained. What had I been straining? My mind; therefore it was my mind that had been giving way. This reappearance of the vision would naturally denote that my mind was again giving way. I shuddered. I saw myself confined in a lunatic asylum, a mental wreck.

My friends to whom my malady became known used every argument to disabuse my mind, some of them assuring me that my vision was a real person closely resembling me. Others averred that people in a disordered state of the system were liable to see all sorts of things. A theosophist declared that I had seen my spiritual self at moments when it had been lifted out of my bodily self. To this person I replied that when I had seen the vision I was very well fixed in my own body. I consulted two specialists in brain diseases, one of whom told me a great deal about the cerebrum, the cerebellum, the dura mater and other substances of which the brain is composed and their reciprocal relations, sounds which I understood. The other told me that I was myself producing an image of myself. He admitted that the first vision might have been caused by a disordered system. His advice was for me to drive the matter out of my mind. Occupation and amusement would assist me to do this.

Young Dr. Penrose did more to reassure me than any one else. While he did not claim to explain my trouble, he told me that it was of no importance. He pronounced me in excellent health and assured me that a time would come when I would look back on my fears as entirely uncalled for. It was not so much his words that reassured me as his personality. He had such a cheerful and at the same time sympathetic manner. He evidently believed what he told me. Since he was the only person who could reassure me I made frequent visits to his office and found every excuse to call for him to come to my home. The result was a love affair. Whether his reassurances affected me because the little god had from the first wounded me or whether I loved him because he gave me comfort no one else could give I don't know.

I engaged myself to Dr. Penrose in the spring, and that autumn I came of age. I knew I was to be paid some money when I was twenty-one which had been in the hands of a trust company. Whether it had been left me by my father or my mother I did not know. I had no remembrance of either of my parents. I had lived with my aunt ever since I could remember anything and had understood from her that both my father and my mother died when I was very young. I had arranged to be married as soon after I came of age as I could get possession of my property. My fiance was a struggling physician, with nothing but his income from his practice, and we needed my inheritance.

A few days before I was twenty-one I was notified by the trust company that any time I would call on or after that date, prepared to sign receipts, my property would be turned over to me, but they would like me to name a day and hour I would be there that they could have present such persons as might be necessary. I replied that I would call at the bank at 2 o'clock on the afternoon of the day I came of age.

I had come to rely on Dr. Penrose for matters of importance, and as we were to be married within a few weeks after getting possession of my fortune I asked him to accompany me to the bank and see that nothing was done that should not be done. On the day appointed we went together to the trust company, were received by one of the officers connected with it and shown into a room where we were asked to wait a few minutes. Presently we were ushered into an apartment in the center of which was a long table. There, standing on the opposite side of the table, was the apparition I had seen twice before. I staggered. Dr. Penrose caught me and steadied me.

"My double!" I moaned, shutting out the apparition.

The doctor saw what I saw—a girl the exact image of myself, but dressed differently.

"Good!" he cried. "If that is your double you have been frightened at a real person."

A gentleman present said:

"I am told that you two young ladies need to be introduced. You are twin sisters and inherit share and share alike in the estate of Wilbur Langford, both being his daughters and heirs."

My sister on seeing me had shown the same evidence of shock as myself. We looked at each other for some moments; then both started with one accord around the table and met in an embrace.

Of that domestic trouble which separated our parents, one taking my sister, the other myself, of their subsequent early death—our mother of a broken heart—it is not necessary that I should give an account here. My sister and myself having been brought up separately, the trustees were instructed to bring us together when we came of age and received our inheritance.

It was some time before my twin and myself could be torn apart in order that we might sign papers spread out on the table to receive our signatures. The business having been finished, we left the bank with our arms about each other's waist, telling of out experiences after our two former meetings. She, too, had suffered, but nothing like myself, since she felt sure I was a real person.

At my wedding my only attendant was my sister.

MEN SCARECROWS.

Human beings as scarecrows? Why not? It may seem queer and brutal to an American, but here in England the human scarecrow is common.

As he stands out there, in the middle of the flat Suffolk field, there is little to show he is not the ordinary inanimate scarecrow. He stands motionless for five minutes at a time, and only when a bird is tempted by the fresh corn just appearing above the ground does he show any sign of life.

From the road outside the field he looks exactly like the conventional collection of old clothes propped upon a stick. The ragged overcoat and the misshapen hat can be seen any day, at this time of the year, in almost any field in England. Even the crows are contemptuous of the figure, and every now and then a number of them appear leisurely above the hedge and settle on the field. But then it is that the scarecrow moves; he hits an old tin can with the rusty handle of a shovel and frightens the birds, and makes them fly quickly out of sight.

So he spends his day, this old bent man, and at the end he is paid 36 cents. He is the village scarecrow.

Every morning now soon after the light comes, he leaves his son's cottage in the meadow and walks through the village street to the fields, a mile away. And then, for nearly 12 hours, he keeps the birds from the corn by making a noise on his old tin can.

Whatever the weather may be, he is expected to be there. In rain he may shelter under the nearest hedge, but he must watch the fields, and if the birds take advantage of his absence he must go out into the open and scare them from the corn.

For this old man knows well that he is competing for his living against the clothes propped upon a stick or the dead crows scattered about the field, and it is necessary that he should take a certain pride in his profession.

Unless he can show the farmer that he is more effective than the conventional scarecrow, he cannot make a living in the few months between the sowing of the seed and the appearance of the corn.

Fortunately for him he does not fear competition with the boys of the village. The days when they were willing to earn a sixpence by frightening birds from the fields have gone. In his day—that is, when he was young—any one in the village who was under 12 was glad to earn a penny a day pocket money and fivepence for the home; but now there are the schools and the town close by and the railway to London.

So it is that he has almost a monopoly in his profession. While the boys of the village are in school he can earn enough in these few months of the year to keep him from the workhouse. He is still capable of scaring birds. His very clothes are a qualification. He looks exactly like a scarecrow, and he has the advantage of being able to hit an old tin can with the rusty handle of a shovel.

At 1 o'clock he has his dinner of bread and cheese by the side of the hedge, but every now and then he gets up and looks around to see that the fields are free from birds.

Sometimes, when the day is colder than usual, his granddaughter from the cottage a mile away brings him a hot dinner in a basin covered with a cloth, and while he eats she talks to him about her school, and if a bird appears runs carefully onto the field and claps her hands and frightens it. And when the dinner is finished she gayly says "Good-by," and goes back along the road.

And then the old man—this shabby guardian of the fields—is left alone. For the fields now are empty of everything except the growing corn. As far as the eye can see there is nothing except old shapes by hedges and by roads. The only suggestion of life is a collection of old clothes propped up on a stick in the field nearby a mile away. And when the old man looks at this silent competitor of his he is filled with new energy, and strides off to the field, making a great noise with his old tin can.—London Cor. Baltimore Sun.

Got Away From It.

"My besetting sin was a dreadful temper," exclaimed a woman one day, "and I never was able to overcome it by my own efforts or suggestions from others until I came in personal contact with a woman whose even temper was like the 'Balm of Gilead' wherever she happened to go. I looked upon her as I would in a mirror and always saw my ugly, frowning, growling self in comparison to her own beautiful, lovable nature. One day I was thinking of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde and I thought of myself, there are two real natures within me, one for good, one for bad, and the best might just as easily predominate as the worst. That very afternoon I was so angry I was ready to fly into a torrent of rage, when I saw her and found her smiling. I overcame my intense anger and I do not think there was ever more rejoicing over one sinner that repented than I experienced in knowing I had conquered myself for once. I will never be the gracious woman my friend is, but her sweet, noble ways have had their influence on my life and I know for my benefit." Many of us meet natures just so beautiful, and who can or will deny that they have a lovely influence and an indirect or rather a direct influence upon all lives around us, thus proving the influence one really good woman has among her legion of friends.

Sounds Funny to Hear—

A young man who eats peas with his knife express wonder at the dexterity of a Chinaman with chop sticks.

The father of six make fun of the father of one when he tells of the wonderful things it does and says.

The gentleman who willingly warbles ballads at evening parties on the least provocation, criticise the raucous tones of his neighbor's phonograph.

The young woman who wraps a rag around her finger so she won't be asked to play commenting on the performance of those who are not so full of tricks.

A hen try to crow, a thin man sing a laughing song, an old maid talk baby talk, an undertaker tell a joke, a farmer boy using slang for the first time, and a confirmed prevaricator trying to tell the truth.

If names were given late in life instead of at birth there would be more Marks.

As a general rule the most promising men are rather slow about paying their bills.

FILIPINO SCHOOL KIDS.

An American Teacher Doesn't Fancy Old Spanish Custom.

Raymond Shidler, an Anthony boy, now teaching school on the island of Bohol, in the Philippine group, writes interestingly of things in that country. Here are some excerpts from his last letter:

"This has been a very hard year in Bohol. Previous to the beginning of the rainy season it had been dry for six months. That is a long time in the Philippines, and as they are not provident enough to lay up, their supply of rice ran out. Many families are living on tree pith; they chop down a certain tree, split it, dig out the pith and dry it, then pound it into a powder, from which they make bread.

"I am continually amused at the small amount of clothing necessary to constitute a dress. It is said that in the Philippines a white handkerchief and three yards of string will make three suits of clothing. Well it certainly will make three suits of g-strings, and you can see plenty of them any time. The women, though, always wear a skirt, at least.

"I now have 350 pupils in my central school. I am using seven of my advanced pupils as aldentes (aids), or as aspirantes. An aspirante is a pupil who wishes to become a teacher, and teaches for nothing, for the privilege of entering my teacher's class. After Christmas two or three of the best aspirantes will be appointed as teachers at a salary of about $3 per month. In addition to my seven aspirantes, I have my head teacher. I spend my time in the mornings going from one class to another and teaching a few minutes; in this way my teachers learn their work.

"When I come into school in the morning the pupils arise en masse with a 'good morning.' You can imagine how that would sound from a room of 150 pupils. That is the old Spanish custom. I will break it up.

"When I go downtown I am saluted in the street by about a thousand kids with the time of day."—Kansas City Journal.

Ball in Foot 36 Years.

All unconscious of the fact, Mr. Max Bolkhard, of 206 Foster avenue, spent thirty-six years with an immense rifle bullet between two toes of his left foot. It was removed last week by Dr. John D. Blake and his son, Dr. Herbert C. Blake, with Mr. Bolkhard's little toe and a part of the bone of his foot, which had decayed, as a result of the presence of the bullet.

Mr. Bolkhard was a German soldier in the Franco-Prussian War. After passing through many hard-fought battles without getting a scratch, he received the bullet wound in the foot one wintry night while on sentry duty a mile from the troops of the army with which he served. This was on Dec. 2, 1870. He spent the night in the snow in the French province of Orleans, and the patrol the following morning carried him off to the field hospital, where he received attention. He was later sent to a regular hospital.

The wound healed, and Mr. Bolkhard thought nothing more of it, believing that the bullet had been removed. He suffered with rheumatism and he attributed all his pains, including the one in his foot, which was sometimes intense, to this malady. Recently there were indications that other trouble had developed, so Dr. Blake, who was summoned, decided that an operation was necessary, as part of the bone had decayed. In removing the diseased bone he discovered the bullet, which was lodged between the little toe and the one adjoining. The bullet is three-quarters of an inch long and so heavy that Mr. Blokhard is unable to understand how he carried it about without knowing of its presence. The bullet is preserved as a memento of the war.—Baltimore News.

Frenchman's Laughter.

Those who knew France before the "annee terrible" have frequently commented on the fact that the generation of Frenchmen who have grown up since then are far more gloomy and morose than their ancestors were. But there are signs that a reaction is setting in, and a number of young medical students in Paris have determined to reintroduce the fashion of hearty laughter, and to form a society for the propagation of "le rire ranlols." They have examined into the question, and have issued a statement to the effect that a man's character can be told by his laugh, and that there are as many laughs as there are vowels. Those who laugh "Ha ha!" are frank and open, and love action and movement; those who laugh "Heh! heh!" are melancholy, with plenty of dry wit; those who laugh "He! he!" are either babies or soft-witted; those who laugh "Ho! ho!" are generous, bold and decided; while those who laugh "Huh! huh!" are miserly, misanthropic and hypocritical. It is evident that we all ought to laugh "Ha! ha!" and laugh "Ho! ho!" like the knights and monks in the old-fashioned comic songs, and the French society proposes to do all it can to encourage people to laugh in this fashion. We wish them all good luck and prosperity in this charitable endeavor, for a hearty laugh is the best encouragement of the entente cordiale.—London Globe.

[illegible] may not to have a good time is to spend most of your time looking [illegible]

Young people who insist on making foolish marriages should remember that the come-home-and-be-forgiven act doesn't occur as frequently in real life as it does in the summer novels.

You often hear of boys who become angry and want to run away. Grown men have the same weakness; there never was a man, probably, who did not occasionally feel like running away to a place where he would never be heard of by his acquaintances and friends.

There is a picture, found on the walls of those who don't run to Madonnas, of a man clasping a woman in his arms. She is attired in her bridal finery, and underneath is the name, "Alone at Last." Girls have always admired it, and the married women have bravely hidden their disappointment in looking at it in a tenderly reminiscent way. The picture is recalled by a snap shot taken of a young married woman recently. She sat before a window from 7:30 one evening until 2 the next morning, listening to every footfall, and then when he came he was so mad because of her anxiety that he wouldn't speak to her. She was "Alone at Last" when she hung out of the window, but how different from the picture!—Atchison (Kan.) Globe.

IMPROVEMENTS

In the Store Owned by F D. Avery.

The grocery store owned by Frank D. Avery has been undergoing many improvements during the last few weeks.

Early in the season he installed a fine new refrigerator which enabled him to take the best of care of his stock and giving the customers the opportunity to see the manner in which the provisions are cared for. The store has had two coats of white paint throughout, new paper and shelves covered with white oil cloth, this enabling him to keep every thing immaculate which is so necessary in a grocery store. Mr. Avery is now completing the 20th year in the grocery business in this store and in all that time has kept a purely up to date place and these many improvements show that he does not intend to lose the prestige he has established.

Base Ball

With six weeks of the baseball season of 1910 remaining the So. Mich. clubs enter on what promises to be the hottest fight in the history of the organization. Kalamazoo, Adrian and Lansing are closely bunched for first place while Battle Creek is a good fourth and may prove a contender for the flag before the curtain is rung down September 25.

Adrian stands the best chance of copping the So. Mich. pennant. The Tots were only 87 points behind Kalamazoo on Saturday and their present stride indicates that there will be no let-up in Manager Carl Vandagrift's came from now until the final smoke blows away.—Detroit News.

Kalamazoo has signed Pitcher Doty of the Evansville team Central league. Doty was a star in the So. Mich. league the first season pitching for Tecumseh. With Datus Lagoe ill, Kalamazoo's pitching staff is weakened and Doty will fill the gap. He will report today.

South Michigan League fans will be interested to know that Memphis of the Southern League has written to the Adrian management, asking the latter to set a price on Fullerton, the classy local third sacker. A reply has been sent, stating the price, and local fans are awaiting developments.

Tecumseh at Last Has a Good Sewerage System

It is of great interest to Tecumseh people to know that at last we have a good sewerage system installed which will insure in the future much healthier and more sanitary village.

There has been much said, both for and against the sewer being installed also as to the proportion of the village that should have the sewer. But without a doubt, everyone will acknowledge that, as it is, it is a great gain to the place. This is shown by the number of people who have taken advantage of it and connected with their homes.

The total cost of the entire system is $33,955.50 all of which has been paid the last $5,169.45 being paid last night. Five per cent of the cost amounting to $1,697.77, has been retained to protect the village against any thing unsatifactory, this sum to be paid in the course of a year.

The sewer has been tested, A. P. Southworth paying for the water used for flushing, this sum to be deducted from the amount paid at last nights' council.

One dollar is paid to the village for each tap and with the added money money gained by the increase of water used, will added much to aid us in paying the tax etc.

At last reports 52 homes had been connected with the sewer and the future outlook is very enconraging.

MUSSELMAN

Mr. Musselman candidate for governor arrived on time in his auto this morning as scheduled.

This however will be proved by the people at the coming election.

HORACE WELLER

The many friends of Horace Weller were congratulating him on Sunday August 14, the occasion being his 92nd birthday. It is given to very few people to attain this age and much less to attain in as perfect physical and mental condition as Mr. Weller.

He is able to attend to all of his business affairs, keeps his place in fine condition mowing his lawn himself and he has not grown old in spirit if he has in years, and as we meet him we cannot help but think age is not all decay; it is the ripening, the swelling of the fresh life within that withers and bursts the husk.
